Triennial Conclave of Knights Templar.

The triennial gala week was ushered in at Chicago on Sunday, August 15. It was the beginning of the twenty-first Triennial Conclave of Knights Templar of the United States, and citizens and sojourning Knights honored it by appropriate services to the Great Master in whom the Order is dedicated. There was divine service at Grace Episcopal Church, at which Rev. Sir Dr. Clinton Locke, the Grand Prelate of the Grand Encampment, officiated, and which was attended by the Knights of the Chicago Commanderies and such Knights as had reached Chicago from abroad in advance of their several encampments. After service the day was devoted to sight-seeing, visits to Chicago parks and to social intercourse.

The drum's deep roll and the trumpet's warlike blast made Chicago's streets resonant on Monday. The red cross shone mingled itself by thousands on warehouses, hotels, structures devoted to commerce and private dwellings. The city looked like a bride arrayed out for her honeymoon. All along the principal thoroughfares, and particularly along the line of march of the knightly pageant, flags and streamers bearing the well-known devices of the Order were thrown to the breeze, and the sands of camps upon the Lake front were pitched, and a veritable canvas city arose. The first business day was further devoted to sight-seeing and the reception of guests, and were followed by the Grand Encampments and distinguished Sir Knights in carriages.

The procession over, the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to the task of recovery from the fatigue incident to the march.

On Wednesday a monster concert was advertised to be given at the Jockey Club track, in which several thousand performers would participate, but, either because the weather was too hot or the ingredients indisposed, the concert did not materialize to any great extent. There was a little music, and a competitive drill for prizes in which Indianapolis was awarded the first prize, Louisville the second and Dayton, Ohio, the third. There were many excursions on the lake in the afternoon, all the steamers in the harbor not otherwise engaged being pressed into service. In the evening the Sir Knights liberally patronized the theaters and special concerts in McCormick, Central Music and Farwell Halls. After these entertainments there was a display of fire works on the lake front, which was witnessed by vast crowds on land and water.

On Thursday the commanderies were packing up and leaving on every train, and by Friday Chicago had resumed her bustling, commercial activity.

How One Burglar Was Disposed Of.

This morning at three o'clock the wife of Dr. J. C. Walker, a leading physician, living on North Pengenny, six stood, two blocks from the Post-office, noticed the hall gas-light to be quite low. She woke her husband, who got up and turned it higher, saying to his wife that the decreased pressure had probably caused it to burn so low. Mrs. Walker was not satisfied. She looked over the side of the bed and saw the feet of a man prowling. Without a word, fearing that the burglar would kill her husband, she arose, walked through the hall into the two front rooms where her two grown sons were sleeping, awakened them, explained the situation, went down into the dining-room, procured a revolver, and came back, handing it to her second son, John, who is also a practicing physician, the other not being weakened by a recent severe illness.

In the meantime the husband was suspicious of his wife's long absence, and looking over the bed observed the face of the burglar intently peering at him. Instantly he understood the meaning of his wife's movements, and also felt that the burglar had underestimated the shaking he had given to insure his escape. Without a moment's delay the doctor threw himself from the bed upon the man, striking him a heavy blow in the face. He choked the burglar who managed to grasp the doctor by the throat, with the other hand he drew his revolver and fired, the ball grazing the doctor's head and carrying itself in the ceiling. The shot confused the doctor, and the burglar broke away, ran into the hall and headed for the front door. In doing this he had to pass the gas-jet and the door of the young man's room, in which the mother and her two sons were awaiting events. The shot alarmed them, they believing the burglar had killed the doctor, and when the man passed under the light John took deliberate aim and fired. The shot put out the light, and John says he heard no sound was heard, and the father thought the burglar had shot his two sons and run to their room, the door of which, which was closed, shutting from the inside, and thinking it was the thief who was pushing for entrance. In a minute or so consultations were made, and the entire family united in a search for the burglar. He was found dead on the threshold of the kitchen, he having run down stairs through the dining-room and kitchen to the back door, which was wide open, where he had entered, before falling. John's ball had passed directly between his left hand and fourth rib, severing the subclavian artery.

When the police arrived the body was believed to be that of Bill Redifer, the most notorious burglar and criminal in the State, who was pardoned from the penitentiary by the governor on the 5th day of last July by Governor Williams. By eight o'clock all doubt was removed by the identification of the remains by Redifer's mother, a respectable and well-to-do woman living in Carver Township, where the shooting could be witnessed. The number of Knights in Chicago was estimated to be about 15,000, and of these not more than 20,000 participated in the display. At the beginning they marched well and the ranks were kept intact, but, as blocks lengthened into miles, the constituent parts thereof one by one dropped out, and only the Chicago Commanderies, impelled thereto by local pride, traversed the entire route as originally laid out and published. The line of march covered about seven miles, and the procession, in consequence of the numerous necessary and unnecessary delays, was over for four hours in passing a given point. The procession was composed of three grand divisions. The First comprising the first to the sixth divisions, the Second, comprising the seventh to the twelfth division, and the Third composed of the thirteenth to the twentieth divisions.

The First Grand Division comprised eighty-four commanderies, and was commanded by his Sir Henry Turner, assisted by his aids.

The Second Grand Division was commanded by Sir Lafayette L. Fletcher, assisted by eight aids, and embraced seventy-five commanderies.

The Third Grand Division was composed of ninety-eight commanderies, and was commanded by Sir Benjamin F. Haller, assisted by eight aids. These were followed by the Grand Passengers, and distinguished Sir Knights in carriages.

The procession over, the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to the task of recovery from the fatigue incident to the march.

The Elk Couldn't Well.

The following satire on the practical uselessness of the present method of rifle shooting is good:

A man belonging to a village rifle team was recently out on the plains of Wyoming Territory looking for game. Finally the party sighted an elk at 800 yards and prepared to shoot him. He was a noble buck. The number of the man got a bead down among the sage brush and artistically placed himself upon his back, with his left arm like a Scott 2, supporting his neck, and his right arm, like a figure 7, supporting the aft end of the rifle. The measure of the wind was taken, and the sights were scientifically adjusted, while the expert made a figure eight with his lips and reached the rifle through the toes of his shoes. The measure of his fore-finger was now taken by a patient millionaire, and he got a trigger that pull slightly on the near side in order to be adjusted to the weight of his finger. Two men were then sent out to put flags each side of the elk to show the bounds outside of which the rifle teamster was not allowed to shoot, and the evening gun was fired. Before falling, John's ball had passed directly between his left hand and fourth rib, severing the subclavian artery.

When the police arrived the body was believed to be that of Bill Redifer, the most notorious burglar and criminal in the State, who was pardoned from the penitentiary by the governor on the 5th day of last July by Governor Williams. Women as Methodist Preachers.

Some time ago the leaders and stewards of Hamline (colored) Episcopal Church (the Rev. W. I. McKenny, pastor) recommended Mrs. Clara Roach (colored) to preach, she having been an exhorter for some time. At a recent meeting of the Quarterly Conference of the Church this recommendation was brought forward, and the Presiding Elder, the Rev. R. Peyton Brown, declined to entertain the recommendation on the ground that there is no law of the Church justifying the license of women to preach. An appeal was made by Mrs. Roach's friends, and the question will now go to that Bishop who may be assigned to hold the next session of the Baltimore Conference. Mrs. Roach (formerly Miss Cutter) has been prominent in church work and has held an exhorter's license for about two years, and has been successful, especially at a meeting she held some time since in Delaware. The final decision of this question is looked for with interest.—Washington Star.

LAST Sunday a gentleman went into a drug store and asked to buy a piece of soap. "Can't sell anything but medicines on Sunday." "But, man alive, don't you know that cleanliness is next to godliness?" "Well, I can't help it if it is." "You don't half try," responded the searcher for soap, as he went out without it.

THE HIRED SQUIRREL.

A RUSSIAN FABLE.

A lion to the squirrel said:
"Would you like to work for me,
And when your task is done, my friend,
Win handfuls of food nuts, fresh from the tree?"
"My lion king," the squirrel said, "to this I do assent."

The squirrel toiled both day and night,
Quite faithful to his trust,
And gathered in fresh nuts from trees
To feed the lion royal.
But still he found the lion's maw
With hungry cravings filled;
"How can the nuts still lessen," he thought,
When I my barrel gain?"

At last, when he was nearly dead,
And pale, and old, and gray,
Quoth the lion: "There's no more hard work
For you, for you may play."
A barrel full of nuts he gave—ripe, rich
The squirrel's heart on them set;
But when he broke in the barrel's top
He'd but the husks to get.

A STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

FOURTEEN years ago I drove from Danbury to Littleton, a distance of forty-two miles, and as I had to await the arrival of the down coach, and I did not start until after dinner, I very often had a good distance to drive after dark. It was in the month of October, and the season had been a rough one. A great deal of snow had fallen, and the drifts were plenty and deep. The mail that I carried was not due at Littleton by contract, until one o'clock in the morning, but the faithful carefully collected the fragments and sent them by couriers to preach, she having been an exhorter for some time. At a recent meeting of the Quarterly Conference of the Church this recommendation was brought forward, and the Presiding Elder, the Rev. R. In doing this he had to pass the gas-jet and the door of the young man's room, in which the mother and her two sons were awaiting events. The shot alarmed them, they believing the burglar had killed the doctor, and when the man passed under the light John took deliberate aim and fired. The shot put out the light, and John says he heard no sound was heard, and the father thought the burglar had shot his two sons and run to their room, the door of which, which was closed, shutting from the inside, and thinking it was the thief who was pushing for entrance. In a minute or so consultations were made, and the entire family united in a search for the burglar. He was found dead on the threshold of the kitchen, he having run down stairs through the dining-room and kitchen to the back door, which was wide open, where he had entered, before falling. John's ball had passed directly between his left hand and fourth rib, severing the subclavian artery.

When the police arrived the body was believed to be that of Bill Redifer, the most notorious burglar and criminal in the State, who was pardoned from the penitentiary by the governor on the 5th day of last July by Governor Williams. By eight o'clock all doubt was removed by the identification of the remains by Redifer's mother, a respectable and well-to-do woman living in Carver Township, where the shooting occurred. The number of Knights in Chicago was estimated to be about 15,000, and of these not more than 20,000 participated in the display. At the beginning they marched well and the ranks were kept intact, but, as blocks lengthened into miles, the constituent parts thereof one by one dropped out, and only the Chicago Commanderies, impelled thereto by local pride, traversed the entire route as originally laid out and published. The line of march covered about seven miles, and the procession, in consequence of the numerous necessary and unnecessary delays, was over for four hours in passing a given point. The procession was composed of three grand divisions. The First comprising the first to the sixth divisions, the Second, comprising the seventh to the twelfth division, and the Third composed of the thirteenth to the twentieth divisions.

The First Grand Division comprised eighty-four commanderies, and was commanded by his Sir Henry Turner, assisted by his aids.

The Second Grand Division was commanded by Sir Lafayette L. Fletcher, assisted by eight aids, and embraced seventy-five commanderies.

The Third Grand Division was composed of ninety-eight commanderies, and was commanded by Sir Benjamin F. Haller, assisted by eight aids. These were followed by the Grand Passengers, and distinguished Sir Knights in carriages.

The procession over, the remainder of the afternoon was devoted to the task of recovery from the fatigue incident to the march.

On Wednesday a monster concert was advertised to be given at the Jockey Club track, in which several thousand performers would participate, but, either because the weather was too hot or the ingredients indisposed, the concert did not materialize to any great extent. There was a little music, and a competitive drill for prizes in which Indianapolis was awarded the first prize, Louisville the second and Dayton, Ohio, the third. There were many excursions on the lake in the afternoon, all the steamers in the harbor not otherwise engaged being pressed into service. In the evening the Sir Knights liberally patronized the theaters and special concerts in McCormick, Central Music and Farwell Halls. After these entertainments there was a display of fire works on the lake front, which was witnessed by vast crowds on land and water.

On Thursday the commanderies were packing up and leaving on every train, and by Friday Chicago had resumed her bustling, commercial activity.

An Ice Cream Treat at Nantucket.

BURDETTE, of the Burlington Hawkeye, tells how the scarcity of young men works for or with a summer girl. One evening, I don't remember when, introduced a young friend of mine, and he is very young and bashful. Mr. Julian C. Elginbrod of Buffalo, to a young lady acquaintance. After a few moments of society chatter he suggested the ice-cream saloon. Then she arose and introduced him to her two youngest friends, the mother of the mother of one her friends, and as soon as she was visiting them. Then the aunt introduced him to her elder sister and an old lady who was not a relative, they explained, but was as dear to them as if she were their own mother. Then they all said in a general sort of a way, "Well, are you

Palestine.

THE progress which has been made in Palestine during the last twenty-five years is especially evident in the erection of manly new buildings. In Jerusalem, inside the town, ruined houses have been restored or rebuilt. Outside the old town are entirely new suburbs, the extension being made especially northward, where there are now a few formal among themselves building societies, which have erected long barrack-like buildings adapted for several families. The number of dwellings during the last twenty-five years has been trebled. Bethlehem conveys the impression of a newly-built town. Inside the town wall has been demolished. The Gach filled up and a number of new houses and magazines, even palatial buildings, have been erected. So also in the gardens of Jaffa many new houses have been erected, and to the south and north of the town complete Arabic suburbs, built by settlers from Egypt. In Ramleh, also, new houses are seen, still more in Kaifa. Nazareth has increased in size, and looks as if it had been rebuilt. Tiberias also has its new houses; in Jenin a new military arsenal has been erected, as also in Nablus, along with a fine new barrack. In the latter place the once lonely valley toward the east has assumed quite a lonely aspect, and in the town are many new private buildings and also a new khan; there are also the new school, the Roman monastery and the buildings of the Protestant Mission. In Bethlehem a new barrack and arsenal have been erected. Through the schools and the increasing trade the working people have acquired greater style and taste, and the newer houses are thus mostly a great improvement on the old—not the oldest, which, as a rule, are well built. Nearly all the houses have now glass windows, a rare thing twenty years ago.

Two Very Tall Skeletons.

THE following was copied verbatim from a note made in his pocket almanac by the late Judge Adee: "On the 24th of May, 1798, being at Hanover (York County, Pa.,) in company with Chief-Justice McKean, Judge Bryan, Mr. Hurd and others, on our way to Franklin, and, taking a view of the town, in company with Mr. McAlister, and several other respectable inhabitants, we went to Mr. Neese's tan-yard, where we were shown a place near the carrying house from whence (in digging to site a tan-vat) some years ago were taken two skeletons of human bodies. They lay close beside each other, and measured about eleven feet three inches in length; the bones were entire, but on being taken up and exposed to the air they presently crumbled and fell to pieces. Mr. Hollister and some others informed that they and many others had seen them, and Mr. McAlister, who is a tall man, about six feet four inches high, mentioned that the principal bone of the leg of one of them, being placed by the side of his leg, reached from his ankle a considerable way up his thigh, pointing a small distance below the hip bone."—*Harrisburg (Pa.) JUDGE BLACK writes from abroad that "Mr. Bradlaugh has great intellectual powers, and he looks like a fool and figure." The Judge adds that he is not so handsome as Mr. Ingersoll, or nearly so brilliant a talker, but as a bold blasphemer he can beat his American rival all hollow."

GEORGE ELIOT'S retirement from literature is mentioned as a settled thing by the Literary News. It quotes her as often saying that her late husband, Mr. Lewes, was a great mental stimulus to her, constantly encouraging her in her work. Isn't that rather slighting her present husband?

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL'S speech at the Savage Club supper has been much applauded by Londoners. "It was admirable in itself," says the London World, "perfectly delivered in a soft, low tone, and yet penetrating voice." Mr. Lowell is described as a wonderfully young-looking American, whom it is difficult to believe is sixty-one years old.

IT is feared that the death of John G. Saxe's wife will have a fatal effect on the poet. He has been bedridden for some time, and was devotedly attached to her, having in several of his works drawn his best woman, both as to horniness of person and beauty of moral character, so plainly after his wife that friends always recognized the portrait. Miss Saxe, the only living daughter, is also an invalid, and could not attend her mother's funeral.

Raising Large Crops of Cherries.

HAVING harvested a large crop of cherries for three or four years from a small orchard, and this year's produce exceeding that of any former year, I thought some village or city reader of your paper would be glad to hear how it was brought about. My farm consists of about twenty-five feet square on a city lot, and on this piece of ground I have two of the old-fashioned sour cherry trees, which I set out eight or nine years ago. I have kept the ground mellow and wet, spading quite often and for three or four feet from the body of the trees. They grew famously, and, if they had never borne a cherry, I would have been well paid in having such nice shade trees. But in the course of two or three years from setting out, we had a fair crop of cherries, and for three years past have sold from the trees from three bushels; this year getting a trifle over five bushels from the two trees, for actual measure. We commenced to pick on June 13th, and ended July 7th, the trees, being so shaded that they did not ripen very evenly. We had cherries that measured plump 21 inches in circumference, but only a small proportion measured so much.

Another peculiarity was that they were never wormy. I do not believe there were a dozen wormy ones in the five bushels. A farmer's wife, who saw the trees at their best, declared that she never saw such a sight in her life. The trees are now twenty-five feet high, and one of them, that we had been examined for worms, has a spread of about the same diameter. They are not bushes, but good-sized trees. Any one can get just as good results if they will put a little work on his trees—say three or four hours a year to each tree. As soon as the ground gets hard around the trees, and the fruit is ripe, give them water and other waste water about the trees, so that the ground will not get too dry, and that will be there again in due time to see a hundred fold for the labor put on them. Another thing is never to allow, at any time of year, worms' nests to form in the trees. The way I get rid of worms is as follows: I take a ball of cloth, say an inch and a half and fifteen to eighteen inches long, wind it around one end of a pole, tying it fast. Then, after saturating it with kerosene, I touch a match to it and apply to the nest of worms. By using a small pole, the flame is not large enough to do the tree any damage, and the worms are so thoroughly destroyed that they do not leave any eggs to appear as worms in the cherries another year. During August and September the worms need looking after, though sometimes they appear in July. Let those who have unproductive trees try my plan, and see if the fruit does not follow.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Does Farming Pay?

AS impression, somewhat general, seems to prevail that farming is not as profitable as other vocations; that more money can be earned in almost any other occupation with less labor; hence the farmer's son abandons the farm, where he is a success, for the uncertain gains of town.

The impression, it seems to us, is very far from the truth. Most of the farmers in every county of Iowa commenced life poor; if they have strictly adhered to legitimate farming and avoided speculation, in most cases they are well situated, and are far more comfortable than an equal number of associates who chose the town. Facts sustain us in the assertion that out of one hundred young men, who leave the farm for the town or city, not more than one becomes wealthy; perhaps one-tenth obtain a competency, and nine-tenths barely make a living. Out of one hundred young men, who remain upon the farm, possibly not one becomes wealthy, but more than fifty per cent. have substantial possessions and good homes, while most of the remainder make a good living and rear respectable families. The point to be impressed is that the average boy is far more likely to succeed on the farm than in town; not because he actually makes more money, but because he saves what he makes. One thing that has allured many from the farm is society, and schools may be added. In these particulars a marked difference can be observed within a few years to the credit of the country. Farm houses and surroundings are more tasteful, and the young men of culture and the daughters are accomplished in the elegant as well as the useful.

Society in the country is no longer rude; if it lacks some of the grace of the city, this is more than compensated by solid acquirements and an honest welcome, characteristic of a high-bred people. The turning point has undoubtedly been passed and the future great men of this Nation will be farmers.—Prof. S. A. Knapp.

The Vermont state election will occur next Tuesday, and that in Maine one week from next Monday.

We want to hear a Southern stump orator dilate upon the services of the Democratic candidate, to see the effect it has on their tender sensibilities. Consistency, thou art a jewel.

GEN. LOGAN characterizes the Southern rebellion as "the Democratic party of eleven of the States rising in armed resistance against the authority of the National Government." That is what it was, exactly.

Gen. Hancock has written a letter of thanks to Governor Hampton for returning to the Democratic party which he instructed individual did who appeared at his own door and was asked by his wife who he came home at that hour: "Came all the other places are shut up."

The "change" that would ensue if the Democrats should succeed this fall, would be to place every department of our National Government under the full and exclusive control of those who only fifteen years ago attempted to destroy it. Would that be a safe risk to take?

The inconsistent, obscure and boisterous party of South Carolina, now openly threaten to refuse employment to any person who may be known to have voted the Republican ticket at the coming election. The mills of the gods will reach those fellows some of these days, and the grist will be finer than that of the "patent process."

The Pentwater News, of last week, says: "The stories of the brutality and profanity of Hancock while in the army, is being confirmed and corroborated from all quarters. James Boothy and George Piper, from this vicinity, both Democrats, who were under Hancock during the war, state that the written stories of his brutality and profanity are not exaggerated."

There is little doubt that the major portion of the bonds of the United States Government are now held by comparatively poor people and citizens of our own country. The present investigation of the registered bond-holders of the Nation will, if it be carried, take much of the "gilt-edged" portion of the "bloated bond holder" fiction from worn harangue usually administered at Greenback meetings.

While it is true that the Democrats are now supporting the same principles that Jefferson and Stonewall Jackson fought for, it is undeniable that the Republicans are contending for the same principles that Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Garfield fought for. The War of the Rebellion will not be completely and finally over until the Democratic party of this country shall have been completely and utterly overthrown.

A Tragic Story Retold.

MORE than twenty years ago Niagara witnessed a tragedy which, while of a heart-rending character, was marked by an act of true heroism seldom equaled in grandeur. Mr. Charles Addington, a young man about twenty-three or twenty-four years of age, was affianced to Miss De Forrest, both being residents of Buffalo. One day a happy party, comprising Mrs. De Forrest, a younger daughter, Eva, a beautiful child five or six years old, and "Charley" Addington, as the friends were accustomed to call him visited the Falls. They crossed the bridge to Goat Island, and while resting under the trees, the Eva strayed away from the group, and approaching the bank of the narrow but deep and swift stream that rushes between Goat Island and the small island lying between it and the main American shore, was attracted to herself by resting sticks into the water and watching them as they were whirled swiftly away. Mrs. De Forrest, alarmed for her child's safety, requested Charley Addington to go after her and bring her back. Charley at once proceeded to the bank, and, thinking to give the little one a fright, approached her stealthily from behind, and, catching her under the arms, held her over the stream. The startled child threw up her little arms over her head, and instantly she slipped through young Addington's hands and fell into the rapids.

The realization of the horrible calamity must have come to Addington's brain with the rapidity of the lightning, but the agony was too great not had cost the child's life—that only one desperate chance of saving her remained, and he would seize it. He sent for him forever. Tearing off his coat, he rushed along the bank until he had passed Eva, who was by this time almost out into the stream, plunging in ahead of her, he seized the child and then performed an act of heroism to which but few can lay claim. As he made the effort he fell back in the rapids and was whirled over the small fall that intervenes between the American Horse Shoe Falls. Little Eva shrank the top of the bank, and by all power had apparently gone from her, and she rolled back into the stream and was hurried to her dread fate. The mother and sister stood speechless and paralyzed with horror while the tragedy, almost instantaneous in its action, passed before their eyes, leaving its dark cloud hanging over all their future lives. Charley Addington had made a hero's atonement for his thoughtless and reckless act. His father—he was an only son—was in the habit of visiting the Falls once a week for years after the tragedy, and he would sit for hours gazing at the spot where his son and little Eva had met their deaths. He became well known at the Falls, and many times have they believed that he would one day voluntarily seek the same fate that his son, in his heroism, had no such ending.—N. Y. Times.

Regarding Valises.

"DID you ever travel with a valise?" asked a man of a party of acquaintances the other evening. Every man in the party had traveled with a valise, and regarded the speaker with interest. "A small valise," continued the speaker, "can give a man more trouble than a stone coffin. It is just large enough to keep one corner of his mind traveling down, just like the dog-cart of a schoolboy's spelling-book. The trouble of losing it is as perplexing as losing a wicket. The majority of men are more perplexed over losing a nickel than over a five-dollar bill. Isn't that true?" and the speaker turned to the first man. "You have lost a nickel, haven't you?"

"Just about."

"You have, no doubt, noted the difference between losing a nickel and a five dollar bill."

Though the Gazette man had never suffered such a financial loss, he was willing to admit the force of the gentleman's argument.

"Well, I was speaking about valises. Several days ago I took a trip from Idaho Rock. I had a small valise. In the hurry of getting ready for the journey I only put one shirt, a collar and a receiver in the thing. As usual, I saw a dozen men with valises like mine. At night the crowd of valises must have gotten mixed up, for a man took my valise and left one exactly like it. I chuckled as I thought of the man's coming surprise, and rather longed for a chance to open the leather receptacle that had been left for me. I didn't dare open it on the train, fearing that some one would notice my surprise. When the train stopped for supper I went around to the back of the house and opened up."

"What did it contain?"

"Nothing but a long bowie-knife and a tin can. Any man who swaps valises will get cheated. Next day another change was made. The contents of the valise that fell to me were a baby apron, a bottle of salts and a shoemaker's hammer. If the world will listen to a suggestion, the man with a valise will stop traveling."—Little Rock Gazette.

PAPER dish mats which can be washed without the slightest injury, and which very nearly resemble the wicker dish mats commonly used on the dining table, are among the most recent novelties. The mats are stamped out of card-board, in both round and oval form and in any desired size. The wicker-work pattern, is lithographed, after which the work is finished up by the application of a very hard kind of varnish. The paper mats, it is claimed, will last as long as wicker ones, are much cheaper, and possess the additional advantage of a smooth surface.

Pioneer Experiences on the Ohio and Mississippi.

THE brave old warrior, General William O. Butler, who died last Friday at the advanced age of eighty-seven, was something more than a soldier. He was a poet, and had at times given notice of his possession of possessing the divine afflatus. His poem commencing:

"I seatman, wind that horn again;
For me my dirl the listening air
Fain its lanfest homes hear
So shall, so shall, each mountain peak"

will long hold its place among the gems of American poetry. But the days when the only means of transportation on our great Western rivers was the flat-boat have passed away. It may almost be said to be a thing of the past, and hence the fine flavor of General Butler's poem is lost to a great degree to a generation who only know of it by tradition.

A voyage from Pittsburgh to New Orleans by flat-boat was an enterprise once of greater peril than a tour around the world is now. It was certain to be one of many months' duration, and its perils to accomplishment. A shot from the shore by some Indian or reckless desperado might terminate prematurely the voyage and the lives of the navigators in blood. A moment's neglect of the steering-oar might wreck the unwieldy craft and all the hopes of its owners hundreds of miles from home and in an inhospitable wilderness. There was peril everywhere—in the currents, eddies, whirlpools, layous and snags of the tortuous Ohio. Added to these were the numerous civilization skulked about the shores or prowled with light canoes among the bayous and creeks, watching for chances to plunder, even if murder was necessary in aid thereof. A flatboat voyage down the great rivers was perilous enough from natural causes, even if man's inhumanity to man had not increased the peril. In those days the government had not thought of gunboats, and the Mississippi was full of lurking dangers. The current was constantly changing. It was easy to be deceived into an old channel from which there was no return. Many a flatboat was wrecked upon rock-de-sac—leading nowhere but in ruin. The organized river pirates and land-sharks were always on the lookout for unwary voyagers, at a slight mishap generally ended in complete destruction. If, under these circumstances, the flatboat man reached his distant home, footsore and weary but penniless, months after leaving it, he was lucky.

In the early days of flatboating a safe return, even when the cargo could not be proved financially profitable, was a grand event and the occasion of tumultuous joy. The landing of a certain class who sought it for its adventure and dangers as much as for its profits. The river pirates and land sharks, the men of dirt early, the class ready, eager and willing for the trade in glass which, like its handsome self, the planter accounted a trip tame and spiritless if unattended with danger. They were rough and ready, careless and carefree. Dreamily floating down the Ohio, they whiled away with song and dance the lazy hours. The boatman's horn was the echoes from distant hills more musical than steamboat whistle or that ear-distracting horror, the calliope. It was a romantic life, befitting the grand scenery and rude times. Ninety days on a slow-moving flatboat, with every constantly changing, but ever wild and beautiful, was a thing never to be forgotten. The spicy adventure in it grew in zest. An occasional adventure with river-sharks only relieved monotony and added interest. It was a delicacy for the looking on the Ohio River to realize that once flatboats, broad-horns, the queerest craft that ever floated, did all the transportation business from its head-waters to New Orleans. Flat-boat, strictly speaking, with rude arrangements for cooking on deck, almost under water, with long oars awkwardly attached to the sides, is a type of the past almost as prehistoric and valid as the Viking ship recently dug up in Norway. Perhaps one day it will create as much archæological wonder, for it already recalls a time we fail to understand—a condition of society and of our country we can scarcely appreciate. The leisure-loving, deliberate, slow-moving flat-boat was fast enough for its day and people. There was luck in its leisure. But the flat-boat has passed away, and the boatman never will wind his horn again. He sleeps as soundly as the warrior's pack, and his ear is as deaf to the sad, sweet music of the boatman's horn.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE illumination or phosphorescence of sea water at night, observable in the tropics and in the summer, and at all times in tropical regions, is largely due to noctiluca miliaris, which is a gelatinous little speck of a fellow, in shape like a peach, but only one-eighteenth of an inch in diameter. The light, which is of a greenish hue, arises from scores of minute points. A glass of water taken where these creatures are present may contain myriads of them. Nets and ropes drawn through the sea pick up millions of specimens, and ropes and meshes are made luminous by them until they become dry.

OTHER FELLOWS THINK SO, TOO.

THERE'S just one thing a man can have
In all this world of woe and strife,
That makes the business not too bad,
And that one thing's an easy wife.

Dad I hurry that I love my girl
For very shame or rural hate!
She holds my heart because she laughs—
Because she laughs, and doesn't care.

I tell my boots just where it stains,
And find them where I put them, too;
That is a thing you must allow.
A chap can't ever reckon do.
I leave her letters on my desk;
She never shuts them on a heap,
Or locks or tilts the kitchen stove
The very one I want to keep.

On winter nights by coal flame
With warm hearthstone before the fire
She never scowls about the same,
Or wastes the ebbs a little higher.
On Sundays she is not so fi—
But what the matter with that thing?
I like my pipe best when I choose,
And with the smoke—I'm the ring.

The best is never fitted with "shams"—
A thing you must allow, I know
To warm screams half to death,
And cuddles all to sleep in a moan.
She has no sleepers any hour,
Nor cares a snore for mine,
And I'm just happiness when I say
The very best is when I come in.

I tell you, Jack, if you would sail,
Just get a girl who lets things come
And go just as they come. Don't fret,
And help you on to lots of fun.
Don't look for sentiment, dear, or show,
Or kindling looks, ripe and rare;
Just take the average of the two—
Who laughs, and knows she doesn't care.

You think, perhaps, our household ways
Are dull, and monotonous, I'll admit
Oh, when they get too horrid dull,
We only go and have a fight.
What quarrels can you see a man
Who is made a little groomed
For the sun, Jack, is a thing
Of beauty—Benjamin.

THE CHIMNEY AT LISGARVAN MILL.

"TWAS when I was a courting Katie that the accident I'm going to tell you about happened. But for this same accident, I don't think Katie an' I would be man an' wife this day, for you see my father was one of the masters, an' Katie being only a laborer's daughter, while he himself was foreman in the mills, getting a good wage, an' having a deal of by his employers. An' if it wasn't for Katie, I don't think I'd be here now to tell you about it, for 'twas she that saved my life, through hitting on a plan that never once came into the head of me or any of my comrades—aye, or of those that you'd have thought would know better than any of us.

I was just twenty years old, my father's trade, having been taken when young by a brother of my mother's, a master bricklayer living in the town. Now my uncle did I came home to Lisgarvan for a bit, just to see my father, and finding that they were in need of hands the new buildings at the mills, I looked for employment there, an' got it at once. Lisgarvan was a rather small place, but pretty place it was in those days, with the river running just by the old redbrick buildings, an' the mills, an' the mill-owner's house, so far as I remember, standing all by itself, so 'tis in banx that most of my time is brought in, an' the hour carried away. 'Twas built so pretty a place now, there are big whitewashed buildings alongside of the old brick ones, the big wheel is stopped, an' you hear little whirr of the engines instead of the sound of the water. But they makes a power of money there, an' gives a deal of employment.

Well, as I was saying, I got taken on as a brick-layer. Katie's father was working there, too, an' I used to see her often bringing him his dinner, and, after a bit, I began to think that I'd like to have her bringing me mine, too, but I'm no letter bringing me mine, too, but I'm no letter bringing me mine, too, but I'm no letter

How the Greenback is Prepared for Circulation.

"All paper money," said a Treasury official, in conversation with a Chronicle reporter a few days since, "both legal tenders and national securities is now engraved, printed and finished in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington. Some years ago our national notes was finished in New York by the Columbia Bank Note Company, but that has been done away with for some time. Under an act of Congress a building has just been completed for the use of the Bureau. Before moving into this they occupied a portion of the Treasury Department."

"What about the process of making a greenback?"

"The process of making the green back and other Government securities is this: The paper is first taken to the Wetting Division. There it is counted and dampened. It is then delivered to the plate printers, each sheet being charged to them. They again count it in the presence of their assistant, who is a lady, and give a receipt therefor. the assistant certifying that she witnessed the count. The receipts are taken to the Wetting Division, where they are compared with the books before work is begun and must agree. The paper is then given the first impression, which is on the back. This is done with a hand press. Attached to all of these presses are registers which keep count of each sheet of paper as it passes through, so it is impossible for the printer to secrete any without being detected. The note then passes into the Examining Division where it is counted a fifth act, and then placed in a drying-box. When perfectly dry it is taken out and again counted, and the work examined by experts, all of whom are ladies. The sheets found defective in any way are expunged, and the perfect ones placed in a hydraulic press, where an immense pressure is given them. When taken out they are perfectly smooth. They are then sent back to the Wetting Division, where they are again dampened."

"What is the next step in their manufacture?"

"Well, they are taken to the Printing Division, where they receive the second impression, which is the black part of the face, after which they are taken to the Examining Division, the dry box, the hydraulic press, and back again to the Wetting Division, the same as at first. They are taken from there the third time to the State Printing Division, where the third impression is received, which is the large red seal on the face. After this they are taken to the Examining Room, dried, pressed, counted and examined, the same as on both previous occasions. From here they are sent to the Numbering Division, where they receive the numbers that are seen on the upper right corner and left center. Both legal-tender and National-Bank notes are printed on sheets, and there are always four notes on each. After being numbered the legal-tender notes are taken to another room, where the margin is trimmed from the paper and the notes separated. This is all done by machinery. After being separated they are again counted and placed in packages of 1,000 notes each. This is also done by ladies who are experts. One lady, a Mrs. Silver, will count one thousand notes in five minutes. This is the final count. They are then ready for delivery to the parties authorized to receive them. The National-Bank notes are not separated, but are sent to the banks that issue them in sheets of four each so that they may be the more readily signed. The rules governing the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are very strict. In fact during working hours the employes are treated more like prisoners than they are like ladies or gentlemen. From 1,000 to 1,500 persons are employed there, the ladies outnumbering the gentlemen considerably." St. Louis Chronicle.

Ole Bull—Sketch of the Great Violinist's Interesting Career.

WITH Ole Bull passes away the last great violinist of the class of whom Paganini was the head, and who became known in musical Germany as the "Naturalisten." He was a remarkable and prominent figure in the history of music for half a century, equally well known in England, France, America, Germany and his native Norway. To the American of the last generation especially he was the greatest of violinists—none, except those who had heard Paganini, knew anybody who could stand comparison with him. To the younger generation he did not come with quite so much prestige. The youthful connoisseurs who heard him at his last performance in this city in March, 1877, for instance, did not place him in the category of greatest artists, and did not discuss him in the same breath with Joachim, Vieutemps and Wieniawski. They had no early memories to soften their judgment, and could not recall anything the standard of judgment to his performance that they had applied to the other masters. This he could not endure in his last years, if ever he could, which is doubtful. Ole Bull was an original phenomenon in a mold was not accountable to modern rules. He was a musical trickster, with a vein of strong but peculiar poetical feeling, and could only be judged fairly outside the conventional provinces. He established this character early in his career. As long ago as 1838, Spohr, while expressing great admiration for the wonderful certainty of his left hand and the depth of real feeling in him, nevertheless stated that, like Paganini, he sacrificed too much to the tricks of the art, and he related how the Norwegian would draw out a diminuendo until the listeners would lose forward in their seats to catch the dying tones, and then how he would hit the hair of the bow from the strings, but retain his attitude for several seconds and thus deceive them into the belief that he was still playing. This story is characteristic of Ole Bull's manner throughout his long career: tricks like this, together with his eccentricity of appearance and conduct, were relied on to produce the effects that made the impressible and not very discriminating American people wild with enthusiasm. Behind it all, however, was a vast deal of native genius and extraordinary talent.

Ole Bornemann Bull was born in Bergen, Norway, on the 5th day of February, 1810. His father, an apothecary, and his uncle, a newspaper editor, were both men of musical tastes. From the latter he learned the first notes and received his first violin. His progress was rapid on the instrument, and at eight years of age he played first violin in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony in D. When twenty-one years old he made his first concert tour. It led through Denmark and Holland and its goal was, of course, Paris. He reached the French capital in 1831, during the prevalence of an epidemic of cholera, and for a time his lines were hard indeed. His small savings ebbed away, and finally he was robbed of his little property, including his violin. Now he despaired and tried to drown himself, but was rescued by a woman named Villeminot. Two years later he made a prominent concert appearance and a success, and from that time his progress in public favor was rapid. He traveled in France, Italy, England and Germany, and created a fanfare everywhere. In 1843 he came to the United States, receiving a cordial reception. One of the incidents of his first visit to this country he told in a newspaper interview three years ago. Said he: "At Washington I gave a grand concert, which was attended by the President, Senate, House of Representatives, and the members of the diplomatic corps. There is a little history how that was brought about which I will tell you. Henry Clay was very fond of me, and I was invited to visit him by a mutual friend. I accepted, and proposed that I should take my violin and play for him. The idea was approved by my friend, who said that Henry Clay would, no doubt, be delighted. On arriving in the house, I took up a position adjoining the sick chamber and played, in a low tone, Clay's favorite melody, 'The Last Rose of Summer.' His interest was immediately aroused, and he asked if the same one was not playing in the street. As the tone was raised, he said, 'Ah! that must be Ole Bull; no one but him could play that air.' When I ended the doors were thrown open and the great man came and embraced me, and I felt that a higher honor than if all the sovereigns in the world had embraced me. When this incident became known I was requested to give a concert in Washington, and the request was signed by the Senators and Representatives and also by the executive mansion."

He returned to Bergen in 1848, having amassed a fortune. His thoughts ran to great enterprises. He there found a National theater of a model kind, but the project fell through. He was back in the United States in 1852, and embarked in a great colonization scheme. He purchased one hundred and twenty thousand acres of unfilled land in Potter County, Pa., and established the Norwegian Colony of Oleana. The colony was a failure, and a subsequent venture as lessee of the New York Academy of Music was a disastrous failure. Since then he has divided his time between Norway and the United States, having married a young lady of Wisconsin in 1870. After returning to Europe in 1872, he gave concerts throughout Germany, and played his violin on the top of the great pyramid, promptly notifying the Khedive of his latter exploit. He was buried in his native town, where he died.—Missouri Republican.

Sow Clover.

TALK or dream as much as you please about preserving or restoring the fertility of the farms of the Northwest with stable manure, phosphates, fine pisster, marl, guano, or any other fertilizer, it cannot be done. The plains of the Mississippi Valley are too vast for any such twopenny operation. They can never be fully preserved in this way. But clover is equal to any emergency and any extent of country. By it—and by it alone—as far as experience and science have developed any agent for this purpose, the present fertile soil of this greatest grain and grass field the world has can be transmitted unimpaired to posterity. There are thousands of waste places and deserts on the earth which clover once tenth, which could have been saved from desolation by the free use of clover. This rich and enriching grass has never had full credit for all its virtues. While it is enriching and preserving the soil in its native productiveness, it at the same time yields an equally profitable crop as any other grass or cereal.

On or near the sea coast where hogs are limited and the products of the soil can be disposed of at twice or three the price of that produced so far as this from markets, farmers may be able to replenish their soil with commercial fertilizers, as with Menhaden fish; but the world does not now, nor can it at any future time, produce enough of these articles to fertilize one-fourth of the Northwest. IF I WERE A LITTLE BABY.

If I were a little baby
I know what I'd like to do:
I'd nestle in mamma's arms,
Into dimples, and laugh, and coo;
I'd never cry for the moon,
I'd never wish to be wise,
But I'd look at you all so fondly
With a pair of big brown eyes.

I'd frolic in papa's whiskers
With a clear little pink-tipped hand,
And speak in the little baby
In a way that you understand;
And sometimes a brother cross near me
With anything sweet in sight,
I'd show him how much I loved him
In my own little baby way.

No matter how days the weather,
No matter how rain might fall,
I'd believe a bit of sunshine
To brighten and cheer you all;
And if baddies should ever be weary,
Or tired and fretted with pain,
I'd help to make her forget it,
And warm her heart again.

I'd be such a perfect darling
With my pretty, dimpled face,
So simple and sweet and precious,
So void of mischief and guile,
So near to the beautiful angels
That I'd bring you nearer to—
And I know I'd bring a baby
Who is just like—what am I not?

MAKING A MAN.

EVERY boy desires to become a man. The superior size of the man, his superior strength, and independence, as well as the apparent business advantages, assume the shapes of immense importance to the active imagination of the boy.

Every boy expects to become a man. From time to time he repeatedly contrives even the details of events that will elapse before he is twenty-one.

Quite early in boyhood, the pleasure takes in those "strange, strange days" that lie in the closing years of his minority. As he gets up higher and higher in his "manage," strange, to say, he finds his anticipations of being his own master afford him less pleasure than when ten years younger.

He begins to realize that the pleasures of boyhood were brighter because they were so free from the shadows of responsibility; that, after all, it is quite a pleasant thing to possess and enjoy the comforts of a home, without feeling compelled to look after the taxes, orchard, and perhaps make constant exertion to keep the interest paid up.

He finds it convenient to go to father or mother for all, or part, of the money when he wants a new suit, instead of having to work after work for somebody who feels very little interest in him, and very grudges him by put off month after month without his pay.

As the boy draws near the thus when he is to be considered a man, he perceives that when young men try to get situations, or start into business for themselves, a great many questions are asked about their qualifications, habits, morals, their past reputation and habits. He finds that some young men, with the best of recommendations, cannot try a whole year before they succeed in getting a creditable situation, even at a low salary—perhaps four or five dollars per week—and that if the young man attempts to start into some business for himself, all others in the same line of business consider him an intruder, who may injure their interests, and they resist his progress by making finer display, by cutting down prices and by diverting from him the patronage.

Beginners in business meet with discouragement on every hand. Creditors are chary about giving long credit; debtors are indifferent and neglectful about making payments; many are in the habit of repeatedly promising, only to often to disappoint; the world is harder-faced and meaner and colder than they had imagined it was.

As the boy draws near manhood, he perceives these unpleasant realities. The beginner, with limited capital and small experience, cannot sustain the strain of losses nevertheless, he is the first one pounced upon by the loggers who never think of working for their living, and by the frauds who make it a business to buy all they can and get the advantage of all the labor they can, with no intention of paying for them; and although he is now a man, he finds that fortune does not pour money into his hands in the wonderful manner he had read of in fairy tales; but bills must be promptly met, or goods seized, rent must be paid, or they will be made, license and taxes must be liquidated, and unless he is extremely economical, he will not have enough means left to buy himself even one plain suit a year, while he was accustomed to having two suits every six months when a boy.

What kind of a man are you making?

When young men start out in life they need capital. Their father or some friends may be enabled to loan them some money to start into business, but if they are incidental, being once rather than work, seeking pleasure instead of attending to duty; if they are careless in regard to small matters and neglect their opportunities to advance their interests; if they are extravagant in their habits and spend more money than it is earned—it can make little difference whether their capital is small or great; it will be squandered—such men are "failures."

If a young man has cultivated a fondness for theaters, horse-racing, card-playing, drinking and gambling, he has developed into what is called a "fast man"—has shunned by all good and worthy society—he is a victim of self-ruin. If a young man is a spendthrift, and wastes money upon unworthy objects, and to replenish his supplies manages to procure money that does not belong to him by rubbing his employer, embezzling public funds, or forging drafts to be cashed, he also wrecks his manhood and degrades himself to the level of a "jail-bird."

If a man is too lazy to make his living, or having acquired money, spends it so freely he has nothing left to live on, but must be "set by by" friends, that man becomes a "sponge;" if he has no friends who will feed and clothe him, but must go from stranger to stranger for sustenance, he is a "beggar;" if he can't do this, it is but a step to the poor-house, and he is a "pauper."

On the other hand, if a young man has acquired habits of industry, economy and sobriety, and has built up for himself a good, substantial moral character, with high ambition and noble purposes, he makes a worthy, successful, respected, honorable citizen—reliable and useful in every relation of life, trusted and revered by all who know him—he is a "manly man."

Who makes the men?

The boy does. But the boy must be helped. Whenever a boy is induced to attend to his work, when he has work to attend to, and attend to lessons when he has lessons to learn, he is being helped to form the industrious habits that shall make him a successful man. Every time a boy is induced to save his money instead of spending it for candy, kites, or other trifles, he is being helped to form habits of economy that shall aid him to become provident, and perhaps a wealthy, man.

When a boy is taught to appreciate his own home (if it is not an immoral one) instead of renegading from house to house, seeking all sorts of companions, that boy is being helped to form stability of character and a love for a home of his own—and he'll never be without one.

When a boy is denied the gratification of every wish, he is being helped to develop the quality of self-denial that shall be the ready helper of his economy, and give him acquiring or building-up capability.

Whenever a boy is induced to obey the reasonable authority of parents, guardians and teachers, he is forming the habit of obedience to the civil laws of the land when as becomes a man, and learning to cherish an appreciation for the rights and welfare of society. And thus it is that a boy who has the right kind of stuff in him is helped to "make a man" of himself.—George B. H. Sawyer, in Golden Days.

They Had to Stop.

On the train coming east over the Detroit, Lansing & Northern Road the other night were two well known gentlemen of this State, one a resident of Detroit and the other of Grand Rapids. The seat behind them was occupied by an old lady with an eye like a hawk and a nose as sharp as a pointed stick, and she had her grandson in charge, a boy about four years old. The boy had fretted and worried for miles, and was feeling sleepy when the politicians dropped into the seat behind them and began discussing the situation. The old lady kept an eye on them and patted the boy, and at last got him quieted in sleep when they began to warm.

"Hancock!" exclaimed one, "why, he'll be so badly beaten out of sight that you'll never hear his name called again."

"Nonsense!" retorted the other, "he'll not only be squarely elected, but you can't be blind of his office as you call Hilden."

At this moment the old lady gave each a dig with her fist and hoarsely whispered:

"I want you both to shut up!"

"Hey? What's the matter?" they queried, in astonishment.

"Matter enough. This young un squalled, and kicked, and bit, and howled for more than fifty miles before I could get him quieted down, and now I won't have no jawing around here to wake him up!"

"But, madam, I must convince this Democrat that he is bound for the lunatic asylum."

"And I must show this Republican that his arguments are but wind and conceit."

"And I say I won't have it!" she exclaimed, as she shook her fist between their noses. "I don't care nothing about Democrats or Republicans, or Unions, or Presidents, or Committee or anybody else. I've got this young 'un asleep after two hours' hard work, and the villain who wakes him up has got to look out for me and a tough old umbrella all the rest of 'em way to Detroit, and my son-in-law will fetch him the mimit the train gets in! Now just sway if you dare!"

The best they could do under the circumstances was to go forward into the smoking-car, leaving the old lady rocking to and fro and singing:

"Little Bopeep has lost his sheep,
And don't know where to find him."

THE Postmaster-General of France receives a salary of only $10,000 a year, and his four assistants obtain only from $5,000 to $5,000 each. The Chief Postmaster of Paris has a salary of but $2,000, and the pay of clerks employed in the Central Administration ranges anywhere from $530 to $900 a year. The compensation of provincial Postmasters ranges from a minimum of $160 in the small towns, to a maximum of $1,600 in the larger cities. In the United States, where Postoffice Officials receive much larger salaries, there is always a considerable annual deficiency in the revenue, whereas, in France, the corresponding revenue yields the Government a large surplus above expenses.

How the Greenback Is Prepared for Circulation.

"All paper money," said a Treasury official, in conversation with a Chronicle reporter a few days since, "bonr legal tenders and national securities is now engraved, printed and finished in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington. Some years ago the bill of the notes was finished in New York by the Columbia Bank Note Company, but that has been done away with for some time. Under an act of Congress a building has just been completed for the use of the Bureau. Before moving into this they occupied a portion of the Treasury department."

"What about the process of making a greenback?"

"The process of making the greenback and other Government securities is this: The paper is first taken to the Wetting Division. There it is counted and dampened. It is then delivered to the plate printers, each sheet being charged to them. They again count it in the presence of their assistant, who is a lady, and give a receipt therefor. the assistant certifying that she witnessed the count. The receipts are taken to the Wetting Division, where they are compared with the books before work is begun and must agree. The paper is then given the first impression, which is on the back. This is done with a hand press. Attached to all of these presses are registers which keep count of each sheet of paper as it passes through, so it is impossible for the printer to secrete any without being detected. The note then passes into the Examining Division where it is counted while yet and then placed in a drying-box. When perfectly dry it is taken out and again counted, and the work examined by experts, all of whom are ladies. The sheets found defective in any way are seeded, and the paper fact ones placed in a hydraulic press, where an immense pressure is given them. When taken out they are perfectly smooth. They are then sent back to the Wetting Division, where they are again dampened."

"What is the next step in their manufacture?"

"Well, they are taken to the Printing Division, where they receive the second impression, which is the black part of the face, after which they are taken to the Examining Division, the dry box, the hydraulic press, and back again to the Wetting Division, the same as at first. They are taken from here the third time to the State Printing Division, where the third impression is received, which is the large red seal on the face. After this they are taken to the Examining Room, dried, pressed, counted and examined, the same as on both previous occasions. From here they are sent to the Numbering Division, where they receive the numbers that are seen on the upper right corner and left center. Both legal-tender and National Bank notes are printed on sheets, and there are always four notes on each. After being numbered the legal tender notes are taken to another room, where the margin is trimmed from the paper and the notes separated. This is all done by machinery. After being separated they are again counted, and placed in packages of 1,000 notes each. This is also done by ladies who are experts. One lady, a Mrs. Silver, will count one thousand notes in five minutes. This is the final count. They are then ready for delivery to the parties authorized to receive them. The National-Bank notes are not separated, but are sent to the banks that issue them in sheets of four each so that they may be the more readily signed. The rules governing the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are very strict. In fact during work-ing hours the employes are treated more like prisoners than they are like ladies or gentlemen. From 1,000 to 1,500 persons are employed there, the ladies outnumbering the gentlemen considerably."—St. Louis Chronicle.

Ole Bull—Sketch of the Great Violinist's Interesting Career.

With Ole Bull passes away the last great violinist of the class of whom Paganini was the head, and who became known in musical Germany as the "Naturalisten." He was a remarkable and prominent figure in the history of music for half a century, equally well known in England, France, America, Germany and his native Norway. To the American of the last generation especially he was the greatest of violinists—none, except those who had heard Paganini, knew anybody who could stand comparison with him. To the younger generation he did not come with quite so much prestige. The youthful connoisseurs who heard him at his last performance in this city in March, 1877, for instance, did not place him in the category of greatest artists, and did not discuss nim in the same breath as Joachim, Wieniawa and Wieniawski. They had no early memories to soften their judgment, and could not avoid applying the standard of to-day in the performance that they had applied to the other masters. This he could not endure in his last years, if ever he could, which is doubtful. Ole Bull was an original phenomenon in art and was not accountable to modern rules. He was a musical trickster, with a vein of strong but peculiar poetical feeling, and could only be judged fairly outside the conventional provinces. He established this character early in his career. As long ago as 1835, Spohr, while expressing great admiration for the wonderful certainty of his left hand and the depth of real feeling in him, nevertheless stated that, like Paganini, he sacrificed too much to the tricks of the art, and he related how the Norwegians would draw out a diminuendo until the listeners would lean forward in their seats to catch the dying tones, and then how he would lift the hair of the bow from the strings, but retain his attitude for several seconds and thus deceive them into the belief that he was still playing. This story is characteristic of Ole Bull's manner throughout his long career; tricks like this, together with his eccentricity of appearance and conduct, were relied on to produce the effects that made the impressible and not very discriminating American people wild with enthusiasm. Behind it all, however, was a vast deal of native genius and extraordinary talent.

Ole Bornemann Bull was born in Bergen, Norway, on the 5th day of February, 1810. His father, an apothecary, and his uncle, a newspaper editor, were both men of musical tastes. From the latter he learned his first notes and received his first violin. His progress was rapid on the instrument, and at eight years of age he played first violin in a performance of Beethoven's Symphony in D. When twenty-one years old he made his first concert tour. It led through Denmark and Holland and its goal was, of course, Paris. He reached the French capital in 1831, during the prevalence of an epidemic of cholera, and for a time his lines were hard indeed. His small savings ebbed away, and finally he was robbed of his little property, including his violin. Now he despaired and tried to drown himself, but was rescued by a woman named Villeminot. Two years later he made a prominent concert appearance and a success, and from that time his progress in public favor was rapid. He traveled in France, Italy, England and Germany and created a furore everywhere. In 1843 he came to the United States, receiving a cordial reception. One of the incidents of his first visit to this country he told in a newspaper interview three years ago. He said he: "At Washington I gave a grand concert, which was attended by the President, Senate, House of Representatives, and the members of the diplomatic corps. There is a little history how that was brought about which I will tell you. Henry Clay was very sick, and I was invited to visit him by a mutual friend. I accepted, and proposed that I should take my violin and play for him. The idea was approved by my friend, who said that Henry Clay would, no doubt, be delighted. On arriving in the house, I took up a position adjoining the sick chamber and played, in a low tone, Clay's favorite melody, "The Last Rose of Summer." His interest was immediately aroused, and he asked if some one was not playing in the street. As the tune was raised, he said, 'Ah! that must be Ole Bull; no one but him could play that air.' When I ended the doors were thrown open and the great man came and embraced me, and I felt that a higher honor than if all the sovereigns in the world had embraced me. When this incident became known I was requested to give a concert in Washington, and the request was signed by the Senators and Representatives and also by President Fillmore."

He returned to Bergen in 1848, having amassed a fortune. His thoughts ran to great enterprises. He wanted to found a National theater of a model kind, but the project fell through. He was back in the United States in 1852, and embarked in a great colonization scheme. He purchased one hundred and twenty thousand acres of untilled land in Potter County, Pa., and established the Norwegian Colony of Oleana. The colony was a failure, and a subsequent venture as boss of the New York Academy of Music was a disastrous failure. Since then he has divided his time between Norway and the United States, having married a young lady of Wisconsin in 1870. After returning to Europe in 1877, he gave concerts throughout Germany, and played his violin on the top of the great pyramid, promptly nullifying the Khedive of his latter exploits. He was buried in his native town, where he died.—Missouri Republican.

Sow Clover.

Talk or dream as much as you please about preserving or restoring the fertility of the farms of the Northwest with stable manure, phosphates, lime, plaster, marl, guano, or any other fertilizer, it cannot be done. The plains of the Mississipi Valley are too vast for any such twopenny operation. They can never be fully preserved in that way. But clover is equal to any emergency and any extent of country. By it—and by it alone—so far as experience and science have developed and agent for this purpose, the present fertile soil of this greatest grain and grass field the world has ever known can be transmitted unimpaired to posterity. There are thousands of waste places and deserts on the earth which were once fertile, which could have been saved from desolation by the free use of clover. This rich and enriching grass has never had full credit for all its virtues. While it is enriching and preserving the soil in its native productiveness, it at the same time yields an equally profitable crop as any other grass or cereal.

On or near the sea coast where fields are limited and the products of the soil can be disposed of at twice or thrice the price of that produced so far as this from maricet, farmers may be able to replenish their soil with commercial fertilizers, or with Mechanden fish; but the world does not now, nor can it at any future time, produce enough of these articles to fertilize one-fourth of the Northwest. "Matter enough. This young'un squalled, and kicked, and bit, and howled for more than fifty miles before I could get him quieted down, and now I won't have no jawing around here to wake him up!"

"But, madam, I must convince this Democrat that he is bound for the lunatic asylum."

"And I must show this Republican that his arguments are but wind and conceit."

"And I say I won't have it!" she exclaimed, as she shook her fist between their noses. "I don't care nothing about Democrats or Republicans, or Tilden, or Presidents, or Republics or anybody else. I've got this young 'un asleep after two hours' hard work, and the first one who wakes him up has got to look out for me and a tough old umbrella all the rest of the way to Detroit, and my soul-below will flek him the minit the train gets in! Now jaw away if you dare!"

The best they could do under the circumstances was to go forward into the smoking-car, leaving the old lady rocking to and fro and singing:

"Little Bopeep has lost his sheep,
And don't know where to find him."

The Postmaster-General of France receives a salary of only $10,000 a year, and his four assistants obtain only from $2,500 to $3,000 each. The Chief Postmaster of Paris has a salary of but $2,000, and the pay of clerks employed in the Central Administration ranges anywhere from $320 to $600 a year. The compensation of provincial Postmasters rises from a minimum of $160 in the small towns, to a maximum of $1,600 in the larger cities. In the United States, where Post-office officials receive much larger salaries, there is always a considerable annual deficiency in the revenue, whereas, in France, the corresponding receipts yields the Government a large surplus above expenses.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

Camphor placed in drawers or trunks will prevent mice from doing them any injury.

Many farmers of experience have said that if timber be cut in the latter part of August or first of September, the worms will not bother it.

Drive two large nails through two spools, as far apart as your broom-handle is thick, and hang your broom on, brush up, to keep it straight.

Avoid if possible an exclusive diet of whole corn for poultry; it may put on fat, but it is not as good for eggs. Let corn be fed as only one among other grains.

All toads, quing out of use for the season, should be put away in a whole and bright condition. Teach the boys the habit of cleaning shovels, hoes and cultivator-teeth.

Pickled Eggs.—Boil fresh eggs hard, when cold remove the shell, cover them with good vinegar; add salt and pepper to taste. If you put red beets with the eggs it will make them a nice red color.

Baked Custard.—Beat separately the whites and yolks of three eggs, add them to a pint of milk with a little salt, sugar, nutmeg and vanilla to taste. Set the dish or cups in a pan of hot water in the oven and bake twenty or twenty-five minutes.

Johnny Cake.—One pint of Indian rice or hominy, one egg, one tablespoonful of butter, salt to taste; flour enough to make a soft dough. Roll half an inch thick; bake quick, without blistering; serve hot. Tear the cakes open and butter. Cut the cakes four inches long and three wide.

Caraway Cake.—To pastry cakes which affect these birds may be gotten rid of by merely placing a clean cloth over the cage at night. In the morning it will be covered with very minute red spots, almost invisible without a microscope. These seem to be vermin annoying and so often fatal to birds.

Mooney's Dew Pudding.—Four large eggs, one pint of sweet milk, a little salt, the yolks of two eggs well beaten; bake thirty minutes; then add the whites of two eggs, with half a cup of pulverized sugar beaten to a stiff froth; set it in the oven until slightly browned. Serve without sauce.

The Queen of Puddings.—One pint of bread crumbs, one quart of milk, six ounces of sugar, butter of the size of an egg, the yolks of four eggs, flavor with lemon and bake as custard. Beat the whites of four eggs to a froth and mix with it a cup of powdered sugar and the juice of a lemon; spread a layer of fruit jelly while hot; cover with the frosting and bake until slightly brown. This is to be eaten cold with cream, or warm with any sauce.

Tomato Meat Pudding.—Cover the bottom of a pudding-dish with bread crumbs, cut up the cold meat in small done; cover it in thin slices, then a layer of tomatoes, peeled and sliced, to a pint add an even tablespoonful of sugar, flour a few tablespoonfuls, pepper, salt and a little onion if agreeable, then bread crumps, meat and tomatoes, repeating until the dish is full; put over all a layer of bread crumbs and bake until a light brown. Serve hot.

To Keep Glue for Use.—Common glue may be dissolved and kept for use in the following manner: Soak the glue, previously broken into small pieces, in cold water for twenty-four hours, then add sufficient water and bring it to a boil until the glue is all dissolved. This may be kept in a wide-mouthed jar. To prepare it for use, put the jar in hot water until the glue is liquid. By adding a few drops of oil of cloves to a plat of the glue it will be kept from molding or becoming foul.

The advantage of pressing the soil over newly planted seeds, especially in a dry time, is enforced by the following experience reported in the London Gardeners' Chronicle: "This season I have used the garden roller for almost everything, and I never saw seeds come on so well; every bed is as square as it should be, without a spade being put up. This is by no means the case everywhere, but as I have been the rounds I hear the complaint, 'My seeds have come bad,' or 'My onions are very thin,' or something of that sort."

Boiled Peach Dumpling.—For the crust, a pound of sifted flour, a half-pound of clarified beef dripplings, a spoonful of butter, salt to taste; flour enough to make a soft dough. Roll half an inch thick; bake quick, without blistering; serve hot. Tear the cakes open and butter. Cut the cakes four inches long and three wide.

The principles for which Lee and Stonewall Jackson fought from 1861 to 1865 are not those which will be voted up by the people in 1880.

Time came late to politics now. That is very good citizen's duty. A good citizen will be successful and active in political affairs as a good merchant is in his business.

The Charleston gentlemen of Kemper county, Miss., are all for Hancock. Their wine is Barksdale, or Yancey, who defeated the anti-Democratic candidate for sheriff last year.

One of Art Buchwald's jokes sometimes is disappearing at the rate of one hundred millions a year. During the good old days of Democratic rule the habit was to double it every seven years.

The purpose of the Democratic party under Hancock is pretty clearly defined by Blackburn, of Kentucky. "We do not intend to stop until we have stricken the last vestige of force and Sherman from the statute book." If that does not mean the destruction of the constitutional amendments what does it mean? The record shows that when Blackburn finished the speech in the House, of which this was the peroration, the Democratic members, under the lead of Commissioner Brumidier Jones Johnston, of rebel pension fame, cheered and offered their congratulations, but the record omits the threat as usual Democratic diplomacy.

This is what that leading Democratic organ, the New York Herald, said of Gen. Garfield in 1877:

"In the account of the occasional carnival of corruption which has been going on with us during seven months and years at Washington, it is really unnecessary to charge a single man with the guilt of knowingly participating in, and even encouraging, the operations of others. General Garfield, of Ohio, a Republican of Republicans, may, it is but simple justice to say, be made pay him to admit that he has done more than any other single member of his party, during the last session of Congress, to show that it is not absolutely necessary for a man to act with a Congressional minority and yet to keep his self-respect and the respect of honest men."

Hayes has the credit for paying the United States government, for the past twenty years, been a failure. Why? One might think so, and indeed some think so, of all that reckless and cheeky assertions of Democratic stump orators, demagogues and journals are to be believed. But the fact, as shown in black and white, that the Democratic party in all that time has been the persistent and malignant foe of all the chief measures by which the fellow was sustained, by which dismantled States were reconstructed, by which money was raised, by which the National credit has been maintained, by which specie payment has been resumed, by which a vast sum of gold has been paid, by which financial and industrial interests have been protected and fired, and the present era of prosperity made possible.

It is described by an officer of a vessel which happily weathered it as "a tremendous cyclone." Portions of the cargo, including the mail-bags, are missing ship, and some of the bodies were washed on the Florida shore.

A MAN named Colsby, of Jasper County, Ia., who had been missing watermelons from his field for some time, procured a large quantity of arsenic and placed small parts of it underneath the rinds of various melons scattered over the patch. A few mornings ago he was horrified, upon going to his melon patch, at finding four negro men dead in the field and a sixth at water-wagon beside each one. They had partaken of the watermelons into which the arsenic had been injected.

He was at work in the mouth of the kiln with three others, pushing down limestone that had parked in, forming a sort of cornice, when the stone sunk into the kiln. All jumped out except Parkhurst, who went down some four feet, and the stone wedged in around him from the hips down, some two or three tons in weight, holding him as in a vise, while the fire underneath slowly roasted him to death. Six men put a rope around him and pulled with all their strength, but were unable to extricate him. In fifteen minutes he was completely roasted. The body was in the kiln nearly an hour before taken out.

Too Common Gullibility.

SOME few months ago a fascinating gentleman with a fascinating name—Charles Albert Ashley—arrived in New York and, putting up at a fashionable inn, advertised for a man on property worth ten times the value of the sum of money wanted. A certain Reesler, a letter-carrier by profession, who by years of saving had amassed five hundred dollars, took the bait and waited upon Charles Albert Ashley, whose story was to the effect that he was the only son of a noble English family, by divers queer misfortunes the remittances from his family had miscarried, and here he was without the necessary money wherewith to support the dignity of the Ashleys. Fortunately for him it happened that he had the family jewels of the Ashleys along with him; they were worth untold sums, of course, but a spirit of pride which did him honor forbade him to sell them without consulting his lawyer in the matter. Reesler, who had never had a lawyer, was duly impressed with the importance of the step, and the next morning with the jewels. "Sir," says Reesler, "I am a poor man, but I am honest. Here are my savings—all my capital—five hundred dollars. Take them and use them in your business, and if you succeed I will be content with a small share of the profits." Ashley showed him and lent the money, taking with him a diamond pin, some rings of enormous value, and a watch, and with promises presented to Ashley by his friend the "King of Africa." So impressed was the letter-carrier with the value of these articles that he rented a safe in some upper company's vaults in which to store his jewels. There they remained until Reesler happened to think that if Ashley should die or disappear these treasures would make him a rich man—of aquatic temperament and judicial mind.

TWOSCORE AND TEN.

Across the sleepy, sunbeam'd atmosphere
Of the [illegible] sickness, silence and soothing,
Through the high window, I could see and hear
The far-down caroling in the forest boughs.

The earnest preacher talked of Youth and Age,
As [illegible] book, with careless children
Its awful pages remember'd not.
My very thoughts, the questioning and Promising

The [illegible] fields, the shadowy superstition
That I was somehow chosen, the special
Life of
Of Powers that led me through life's changeful [illegible]
Spirits and influences of earth and air.

In curious size of myself grown wise,
I think [illegible] I was and dared to hope,
And how my poor achievements satisfied
My [illegible] brave dreams and happy boyscope.

To see the future flushed with morning fire,
How high hearts inviting courage and desire—
This is the glory of our youthful years.

To feel the prettiness of prizes won,
With all our wise ambition, to behold
So much triumphed and so little shame—
This is the luxury of [illegible] young old.

Yet why repine? Though soon we care no more
For thoughts which, till won, appear so
Dear,
They serve their use, as fora held out before
Beguiled our infancy to try its feet.

Not in rewards, but in the strength to strive,
The blessing lies, and new experiences gained
In each [illegible] done, hope kept alive,
That Love and Thought are bounded and encircled
By
So had in vain the struggle, though the prize
A wasting me was other than in sought,
As feet have missed the helm of Paradise,
Yet life is even more blessed than I deemed.

Riches I never sought, and have not found,
And Fame has passed me with averted eye;
In crooks and nooks my quiet voyage is bound,
While the great world without frets at my Ity.

No withering curse of another's lot,
Nor madness of misfortune, plagues my Soul;
For me alike what is and what is not,
Both what I have and what I lack are best.

A flower more sacred than far-seen success
Doth now my watchful spirit fill;
Sweet compensation to my humbleness,
And love to bless and be beloved is all.

I keep some portion of my early dream:
Brokenly bright, like moonbeams on a River,
It lights my life, a far shadowy stream,
Moves as I move, and leads me on forever.

Our [illegible] longings prophesy [illegible]
Our fullest wishes still unfold the child;
And to my life I trace that largest plan
Whereby at last all things are reconciled.

The storm-cloud years, the years that wound and Hasten,
The world, where simple faith soon grows
Cold,
Toil, passion, loss, all things that mold and Chasten,
Still leave the inmost part of us unchanged.

O boy of long ago, whose name I bear,
Stand still, sad child, to-day, and wait for me,
Across the years I see you, sitting there,
Wondering and eager not into the blue

At this juncture the report of a gun sounded near, and Garnet looked up just in time to see a chipmunk, running along the fence dividing her aunt's lot from Mr. Denver's, topple over, and an instant leave a man in gray, museum-ly framed and handsome as Apollo, with wide sombrero shading his face, appeared in sight. How propitious the fates were! What she had divently wished for was yonder—a man. Mr. Denver's hired man, without doubt. She suspended operations, and with her hoe raised aloft, cried out:

"Here, young man, come here! I want you to help in digging a few bushels of potatoes. I will see that you do not incur Mr. Denver's displeasure by doing as I desire. And, indeed, for that matter, you might as well be working for me as to be lolling away your time in killing harmless creatures. Come, what do you say?"

"All right, miss; I'll be with you as soon as I can exchange my gun for a hoe, for I suppose you intend to keep on digging?"

"Certainly. Now don't be long about it. That's a good man!"

She was earnestly digging away when he vaulted over the fence, and stood by her side, hoe in hand, his hat lower down on his face than ever. But Widow Darley was not to call attention to his personal appearance. He was nothing but a hired man, so whether ugly or comely, what mattered it to her?

Old Sol, an infatest ball of heat, had risen and set many times since the perspiration stood out in beaded drops upon their faces as they toiled on. Mr. Denver's hired man making no sign of progress with his row of potatoes than Garnet with here.

The girl glanced at him contemptuously.

"You don't succeed any better than I do, I'm afraid, in digging potatoes. I never saw a more slovenly worker in my life. Why, you are actually leaving more than half the potatoes in the ground! Now see how I dig her potatoes. Now see how I dig her potatoes. By the time I gather enough to gather all the potatoes in the ground!

The Democrats of this district here nominated Pat Sickle, of Old Mission, for Congress.

Have you heard from Vermont? The Republicans have carried the State by 25,000, and probably more, which is a larger majority than ever previous election. Very much to be thankful for.

A man named Pratt, who had consented to be sacrificed upon the altar as his party's Democratic candidate for Congress in this district, took a few copies of local newspapers in a few hours on a Monday last Wednesday. The managers of the convention, with usual resignation to a fixed upon fate, instructed the delegates to stand the slaughter like martyrs of old, and the delegates to a man—nearly unanimously—declared in favor of Pratt for the honor. Mr. Brown, chairman of the Democratic committee, declared in favor of Mr. Pratt, and declared that he was not to be consulted in the matter, and that he would not be a candidate for Congress under any circumstances. He was elected by acclamation, and declared

A California Lady's Oyster Experience.

I NEVER found anything but once here in excess of my expectations or even approaching them, and that was the New York oysters. I had then just come on from California, where oysters are very small and unimportant, not to say insignificant, and I had often sat a hundred there at a time, and had always felt that I could eat more if I had them. So, when I arrived at the Metropolitan Hotel I ordered my dinner to be served in my room, and told the waiter to bring with my dinner a strong cup of coffee and a hundred raw oysters. He looked at me a moment, and then said:

"Did I understand you to say a hundred oysters?"

"Yes," I answered; "raw, on the half shell, with vinegar; no lemons, and as soon as you can, for I am very hungry."

"Ahem! Miss, do you want a hundred?"

"Yes, I do. What are you waiting for? Must I pay for them in advance? I want nice large ones."

"No, no, miss. All right, you shall have them," and he went out. I continued my writing and forgot all about my dinner till he knocked and came in with my dinner on a tray, but no oysters.

"How is this?" said I. "There are no oysters."

"They's comin', miss, they's comin'," and the door opened and in sled three more sons of Africa's burning sands, each with a big tray of oysters on the half-shell. I was staggered, but only for a moment, for I saw the waiters were grinning, so I calmly directed them to place one tray on a chair, one on the wash-stand and one on the bed, and I said:

"They are very small, aren't they?"

"Oh! no, miss, do bery largest we'so got."

"Very well," said I; "you can go. If I want any more I'll ring."

When they got out into the hall one said to the other:

"Fore goodness, Jo, if she eats all them oysters she's a dead woman."

I did not feel hungry any longer. I drank my coffee and looked at the oysters, every one of them as big as my hand, and they all seemed looking at me with their horrible white faces and out of their one diabolical eye, until I could not have eaten one any more than I could have carved up a live baby. They leered at me and seemed to dare me to attack them. Our California oysters are small and with no more individual character about them than grains of rice, but these detestable creatures were instinct with evil intentions, and I dare not swallow one for fear of the disturbance he might raise in my interior, so I set about getting rid of them, for I was never going to give my beaten before those waiters. I hung a dress over the keyhole after I locked the door, and put outside my window found a water spout that had a small hole in it. I carefully enlarged it, and then slid every one of those tenacious devils down it—one—one hundred and two of them—they all the time eyeing me with that cold, pasty look of malignity. When the last one was on; of sight I stopped trembling and finished my dinner in peace, and then rang for the waiters. You should have seen their faces! One of the waiters asked if I would have some more. May be never know the internal pang he inflicted upon me; but I replied calmly:

"Not now. I think too many at once might be hurtful."—Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Premiums Offered by the Limekiln Club.

THE Committee on Agriculture reported that all space wanted by the Club at the coming State Fair could be secured, and recommended that the members bestir themselves on the matter of entries. After considerable discussion it was resolved to offer premiums as follows in the name of the club:

1. For the largest watermelon grown in a cornfield eighty rods from a house, a prize of a wheelbarrow with red handles. Exhibitors must make affidavit that they did not set a watch on the melon patch. In case no colored man lived within two miles of the cornfield, this exhibit will not count.

2. For the biggest possum grown in the State, a prize of fifty cents in cash.

3. For the best lot of ten dogs owned by any one colored family in the State, a prize of a grind-stone making forty-four revolutions per minute.

4. For a dozen fowls which have roosted each night for six months in a hen-coop not guarded by a bear-trap, alarm-bell, spring-gun, or other device to prevent a full and fair investigation of their manner of roosting, a prize of a photograph of an ice-house containing fifty tons of ice.

Later on several other premiums will probably be offered, and the Club intends to offer a prize for the best specimen of frescoing on a board fence with a whitewash brush, competition open to the world.—Detroit Free Press.

A LABOR-SAVING invention is to have one long cake-tin divided in the middle. When making cake put half the quantity in one end of the tin. Add to the remainder, spices, raisins, etc., according to taste, and put in the other end of the tin. This saves time in making and baking. The result will be two kinds of cake for the basket, and if the family is small one is less likely to have dry cake on hand than if two large cakes are made at the same time.

A WOMAN who has four sons, all suitors, compares herself with a year, because she has four seasons.

Gas's Own Possessions.

THERE are certain articles of personal property which ought in every household to be recognized and guarded as belonging to the individual, and respected accordingly. Among these, not the least important is the umbrella. In sunny weather an umbrella is almost universally regarded as an incumbrance, and nine out of ten people in the community if the prospects are doubtful, prefer to think that the skies will clear, and leave the umbrella at home. But once let the rain pour down in earnest, and the independent, the envied, the happy person is the person who is provided against the storm. It is droll to observe the flurry and fuss which a rainy morning causes in some improvident circles. Father and the boys, who must go to business, march off with their own special umbrellas, all jaunty Susie, delicate little Fred, and careless Will, having none which they can respectively claim, are reduced to the state of oxyphores and beggars. A corner in the lower hall, from remote and prehistoric times, has been occupied by umbrellas in various states of dilapidation. It is a dim and traditionary spot. Cook has frequently complained of the umbrellas as rubbish, but they have been considered by the authorities too good to throw away, and now they are sought for as for hidden treasure. Alas! as one superannuated, faded, rickety wreck after another is exposed in the light of the dining-room, it is evident that they have seen their best days, and are no more to be depended upon as expert will when about to send messages on trial.

"Hold on, I will get you the morning Scimitar," finally suggested Tim, shaking all over, and moving toward another room.

"Never mind, this will do," said Edgerton, as he picked up a volume of Shakespeare which happened to be lying near, "all over there and take what I send."

Tim, with paper and pencil, obeyed. By a remarkable chance, which can never be explained, Edgerton opened the book at the play of "Hamlet," and his eyes fell on the first speech of the "Ghost."

"Are you ready over there," asked the Colonel.

"All ready," said Tim.

And then the Colonel commenced to sound:

"I—am—the—g—"

This came very slow, according to the supposed capacity of the listener to read. Tim had it down, and then came:

"Father's spirit!
Doomed—for—a—time"

"Are you taking me?" asked the Colonel, looking anxiously in Tim's direction.

"I am," said Tim.

And he was, for every line of the Ghost's speech was alive in Tim's memory. He has played the part a dozen times when Judge G. H. Bragdon, C. F. Buck, Esq., and others had appeared in some of their favorite characters, but of this Edgerton knew nothing. He was only sending words for Tim to read, and as Tim kept on writing Edgerton increased his speed, and had lost all connection with the sound of the instrument; but he knew what to write and write he kept on writing. Tim grew more and more astonished as he sent faster and faster and faster and finally reached a speed seldom excelled by the most expert operators.

"Let me see what you have written," demanded the surprised Edgerton, as he finished the speech.

He looked from the book to the paper, and from the paper to the book, as if he could not believe his eyes; but there it was on Tim's sheet word for word, the speech written as he had sent it.

"This is something wonderful," said the astonished Colonel. "You must have given your whole time to this."

"Yes, sir," said Tim, "I have studied hard."

"Studied hard! I should say so. Why, sir, I don't know of a better operator in the United States than you are to-day."

At that stage of the proceedings Tim did not have the face to confess how shamelessly he had imposed upon the Colonel. After receiving such compliments for expert work, he could not give himself away and acknowledge that he knew next to nothing about telegraphing. He has never told Edgerton to this day, and never will, of the ghostly trick played on him.—N. O. Picayune.

A Sluggish Country.

THERE is a story told of a tourist who, happening to be at Lisbon, was present one day at a sitting of the Cortes. The Lower Chamber was debating the clauses of a bill for reimbursing a Provincial postmaster, whose stamps had been stolen by a gang of brigands. The traveler left the Tagus and sailed to Callao, thence he went to Paraguay, and some months later he was in California. He crossed the American continent to New York, then proceeded to England, and at the expiration of about eighteen months he turned up again at Lisbon, where he found the Cortes still gravely deliberating over the bill indemnifying the Postmaster of Tras os Montes for the loss of his mules; the morsel of which unalloyed is, that Portugal, although apparently so peaceful an Europe-on that she is scarcely ever heard of, is an extremely sluggish and backward country.—London Telegraph.

How Tim O'Neille Learned to Telegraph as Vast as a Man Could Speak.

THOSE who have visited the Gas Works at Fort Wayne, Ind., and particularly Colonel Edgerton's laboratory, need not be told of his accomplishments in various branches of arts and science. One day before leaving New Orleans for his home in the West, he said to O'Neille:

"Now you want a telegraph from the office to the works. It will save you a man who must constantly be running back and forth."

This, be it remembered, was before the transp-saving telephone had been perfected;

"Yes," said Tim, "we have been thinking of putting up a ribbon-printing machine."

"Hang the printing machine," said the Colonel, who scorned the use of such childish things. "Get yourself a regular Morse instrument and learn to send your own messages and read by sound."

Three months had elapsed when Edgerton returned to the city on business, and he took occasion to see how things were getting on at the Gas Works. After looking about he said, in his quick way:

"O'Neille, how are you progressing with the telegraph?"

"Oh, very well," said Tim, trembling as in the presence of a master, "we can communicate slowly."

"Let me try you," said Edgerton, looking about him as if for some printed matter, as an expert will when about to send messages on trial.

"Hold on, I will get you the morning Scimitar," finally suggested Tim, shaking all over, and moving toward another room.

"Never mind, this will do," said Edgerton, as he picked up a volume of Shakespeare which happened to be lying near, "sit over there and take what I send."

Tim, with paper and pencil, obeyed. By a remarkable chance, which can never be explained, Edgerton opened the book at the play of "Hamlet," and his eyes fell on the first speech of the "Ghost."

"Are you ready over there," asked the Colonel.

"All ready," said Tim.

And then the Colonel commenced to sound:

"I—am—the—g—"

This came very slow, according to the supposed capacity of the listener to read. Tim had it down, and then came:

"Father's spirit!
Doomed—for—a—time"

"Are you taking me?" asked the Colonel, looking anxiously in Tim's direction.

"I am," said Tim.

And he was, for every line of the Ghost's speech was alive in Tim's memory. He has played the part a dozen times when Judge G. H. Bragdon, C. F. Buck, Esq., and others had appeared in some of their favorite characters, but of this Edgerton knew nothing. He was only sending words for Tim to read, and as Tim kept on writing Edgerton increased his speed, and had lost all connection with the sound of the instrument; but he knew what to write and write he kept on writing. Tim grew more and more astonished as he sent faster and faster and faster and finally reached a speed seldom excelled by the most expert operators.

"Let me see what you have written," demanded the surprised Edgerton, as he finished the speech.

He looked from the book to the paper, and from the paper to the book, as if he could not believe his eyes; but there it was on Tim's sheet word for word, the speech written as he had sent it.

"This is something wonderful," said the astonished Colonel. "You must have given your whole time to this."

"Yes, sir," said Tim, "I have studied hard."

"Studied hard! I should say so. Why, sir, I don't know of a better operator in the United States than you are to-day."

At that stage of the proceedings Tim did not have the face to confess how shamelessly he had imposed upon the Colonel. After receiving such compliments for expert work, he could not give himself away and acknowledge that he knew next to nothing about telegraphing. He has never told Edgerton to this day, and never will, of the ghostly trick played on him.—N. O. Picayune.

A Sluggish Country.

THERE is a story told of a tourist who, happening to be at Lisbon, was present one day at a sitting of the Cortes. The Lower Chamber was debating the clauses of a bill for reimbursing a Provincial postmaster, whose stamps had been stolen by a gang of brigands. The traveler left the Tagus and sailed to Callao, thence he went to Paraguay, and some months later he was in California. He crossed the American continent to New York, then proceeded to England, and at the expiration of about eighteen months he turned up again at Lisbon, where he found the Cortes still gravely deliberating over the bill indemnifying the Postmaster of Tras os Montes for the loss of his mules; the morsel of which unalloyed is, that Portugal, although apparently so peaceful an Europe-on that she is scarcely ever heard of, is an extremely sluggish and backward country.—London Telegraph.

THE willow which overshadows the grave of Napoleon at St. Helena is the second planted since the interment of the Emperor, and is twenty-six years old. Willows on that island rarely exceed thirty years of age, and the shoots are carefully preserved for replanting.

Straw for Fodder.

IN this season of short fodder many farmers will place much dependence on their straw, and with judicious management they will be able to carry their stock through to another spring with what they regard as very short hay supplies. Everything depends upon the character of the straw they use in place of the more valuable product, and in the manner of feeding it to their cattle. Whatever kind of grain crop is to supply the fodder, to get the most palatable, as well as the most nutritious, and, therefore valuable fodder that can be made from the straw, it should be cut early. To illustrate this point, take the oat crop. Let it be cut when the grain is fully formed, but not yet hardened, the stalks green and juicy, and bound as soon as wilted, then set in round shocks and capped. This treatment will give good plump grain and bright straw under good shelter and feed it in the stable with enough grain to make the whole as good as the best hay. It is usually a question of economy about which there should be but one option viz: That it is not consistent with profit to allow farm stock to decline in thrift during fall and winter. If the animals will keep in good condition on straw that will do—if not, give grain. That is where there is of the whole question. It is usually true that grain must be given with hay when teal will not maintain thrift. Get this point well settled in the mind of every farmer and there will be more profit in middle-feeding and less difficulty in keeping colts or frames well covered. Keeping the rule in view it may be necessary to begin grain-feeding with the early frosts, or even before. The point is to maintain thrift at whatever cost, for without it, there is that running back which may be called the stern chase—always a long one.—Indianapolis.

Fixing Up Around the House.

IF farmers would give a little more attention to fixing up around their houses, they would make their farms much more attractive to themselves, to their children, and even to passers by. A few grape vines, a few small fruit trees, a few rose bushes and shrubs and flowers—these are the things that give beauty and an air of comfort and prosperity to any house. Many people who live in villages and cities even will go into the country out of land as not only to add greatly to the beauty but the value of their property. Their father and his boys would soon be as much pleased and interested in this kind of home decoration as the mother or sisters. It would relieve your thoughts from the harder part of farm work, take home and pretty and attractive to the eye, you would find a constant rest and refreshment thereby. In the pointry department a little variety is also profitable, and the artistic eye will have noticed that our more wide awake and prosperous farmers often have a few geese or ducks or guinea fowls or even a peacock, as a sort of "figure head" to the poultry yard. A few swarms of bees on a farm are always suggestive to me of "efficiency and skill on the part of the owner. A true striped squirrel is worthy of cultivation to some extent in any calling, and people are giving much more attention to this line than they formerly did. They did a few years ago. It requires but a little more care and skill to conform to the habits of the squirrel than to conform to the habits of most wild animals, and the reward is ample. A person with any love for the beautiful in nature or art will work with much more ease and pleasure on anything where this law is regarded than where it is ignored. If you should hire a raw Irishman to do your work, we venture to say he would do it enough better if your farm and garden are laid out with an eye to beauty as well as utility to more than compensate you for the skill expended on the matter of art.—Exchange.

A Discarded Wife.

ANOTHER American girl who sought distinction in a titled husband has come to grief in the dissolution of the marriage between Miss Moulton, of this city, and Count Von Hatzfeldt, of Germany, who gives up his wife in order to enjoy political honors. Mrs. Moulton's mother was Miss Metz, and her grandmother was once a favorite actress. Her parents several years ago made their home in Paris, and it was there that their daughter met the German Count whom she married in 1869. A German resident in this city is quoted by the World as saying that the wife which the Count has obeyed in discarding his wife is only a social or. The German Count, according to the strict notions of the Empress Augusta, regards either a connection with the stage (even by inheritance only) or a divorce as a bar to social intercourse, and the fact that the Countess's grandmother was an actress may be the only reason why the Count could not become Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs so long as he acknowledged his American wife. If this is the reason for his course, the moral lesson which it teaches of German Court usages is not a flattering one.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A "CHUBBY BOY" shut up three days without food or water, will, it is said, emerge as "run mad hungry" as to banish all thought of her former intentions.

It was by this means that the crime may have been committed in that locality before.

LATER NEWS.

THE bush fires near Upton, Canada, continued to burn with unabated vigor on the 11th, and it was feared that should there be no rain soon the damage would be greatly increased. Already some 150 families had been rendered homeless and their cattle and other property destroyed. Relief committees were being organized in many districts. A considerable sum of money had been subscribed at Montreal, Quebec and St. Hyacinthe.

How to Go to Bed.

WHEN to sleep, where to sleep and how to sleep are questions concerning which few people consider it necessary to consult anything but their own inclinations, their convenience or their necessities. The tramp, like the man in a state of nature, curls up or stretches out wherever or whenever an "exposition of sleep" overtakes him, and enjoys his slumbers without going through any preliminary formalities. The generality of other people go to bed the way they have always gone, without stopping to consult books of instruction, if they ever knew such books had been written, and get to sleep as quickly as possible—which on hot nights such as those we have been experiencing during the present week is not very soon.

In the days gone by it was considered necessary to give some instructions concerning the best time for slumber and the proper manner of preparing for it. Turning over a pile of ancient volumes and treatises containing hygienic rules, we have noted some suggestions made in different ages concerning this important matter. Whilst the written and printed instructions substantially agree on all the important points, there is a curious difference between them and modern practice in one or two features.

A triplet, current in the days of our fathers and grandfathers, concerning the proper course to be pursued after meals, instructed people, if they would enjoy perfect health, to

After breakfast work a while;
After dinner sleep a while;
After supper walk a mile.

The after-dinner programme was unquestionably a large number of persons at the present time, but it was considered reprehensible by the old writers on healthful sleep. That rhyming embodiment of eleventh century hygienic wisdom, the "Regimen Sanitatis Salernitanum," or "Code of Health of the School of Salernum," says:

Let no one lay sleep be heard to come at all
Upon his eyes before the noon-tide meal;
Sleep, headache, fever, rheums will
On him who yields to noontide's drowsy call.

Andrew Boorde, writing in the sixteenth century, says that men in health, "what age or complexion soever they be of, should take their natural rest and sleep in the night, and to eschew meridyall sleep." Sleep after dinner was, in especial, to be avoided if possible; but if heaviness overcame the diner, and indulgence in a post-prandial nap could not be avoided, then, says Dr Boorde, "Let hym make a paune, and then let hym stande and lene and slepe agaynst a cupborde, or else let hym sytte upright in a chayre and slepe." Sleeping on a full stomach, says the same authority, "doth ingender the yvell colour in the visage, and maketh the synewes, and specyally the synewes of the handes, to be lame, and doth ingendre the dropsies and the gowte, and doth make a man looke pale and colloured." Another authority, Dr. Bulleyn, solemnly informs his readers that "to slepe in the fielde is perilous," which in the days when gentlemen of the purse-taking profession were plying their vocation at a lively rate on the highways and byways, and tramps and "sturdy beggars" abounded to the great perplexity of honest folk, was a suggestion-ally a correct statement on other grounds than those purely hygienic.

"Early to bed" was the rule enjoined by the old writers, and the best time was held to be about two hours after supper, which was the heaviest meal of the day. "To bedwarde be yon merry, or have merry company about you, so that the delectable jus auge our lwytnes, sorrowe, nor pensyfulnes, do trouble or disquyet you." A good bye "to wast and consume the ouy vaporures within the chambre" was strongly recommended, and one writer added the suggestion that it was not good policy to sleep in a chamber much troubled with rats, mice or snails. A respectful distance should, however, be kept from the fire "lest the fyre drye the humour of it, for fire doth styfne and doth drye up a mannes blode, and doth make sterke the synewes and joyntes of man." Contrary to the modern American idea that sleeping with open windows is most healthful, the Englishman of three centuries ago was particularly enjoined to carefully close the windows of the bed chamber.

Feather-beds were the rule for persons of good estate, but Dr. Boorde advised that instead of sleeping directly on the feather-bed there should be interposed a flock mattress or thick cotton quilt. Special attention was given to the night-cap. One writer insisted that it should be of scarlet. Another recommended it should "have a hole in the top through which the vapor may goe out."

Having observed all the directions given in some of the books, with considerable fullness of detail, and at last stretched himself on the bed, the reader was told how to dispose himself so as to secure both sleep and health. All but one of the writers directed that the first position should be on the right side. Dr. Boorde says there should be a rest for a short time on the left side, and then on the right. All agree that the regular sleep of the night should be upon the left side. To lie upon the back was a proceeding to be "utterly abhorred," and in this modern medical authorities agree with the elder brethren. Contrary to Catlin's theory, one ancient hygienist, Dr. Vaughn, recommended that every person should sleep with his mouth wide open, that the "humeosities" of the stomach might the more easily escape. The same authority strongly recommended that mastic be chewed before going to sleep, and white pepper on getting up in the morning.

Finally, the advice of Sir John Hartington can be strongly recommended to our own readers as a "good night" parting: "When you put off your garments to go to bed, then put away all your cogitations, and lay them aside, whether they be public or private, for when all your members be free from all cares you shall then sleep the quieter, concoctive (digestion) and the other natural actions shall be best performed."

JUSTICE CHITTENTON, of Nashville, has rendered a decision in the case of L. Lyman, who sued Denis McCarty for money alleged to have been lost at a game of poker. Justice Creighton decides that, under section 1,711 of the Code, a party may recover money lost at a game of chance, but can not recover money lost that he has previously won. It is also decided that whether or not the game was "square" had nothing to do with the case.

Women as Engravers.

AT the present time there are only two women in the United States notable for first-class engraving on steel. These are Miss Sartain, daughter of John Sartain, Chief of the Art Department of the Centennial Exhibition, and Mrs. Wormley, of Columbus, Ohio. Miss Sartain had the good fortune to be educated under her accomplished father, whose task of engraving Rothermel's latest picture, the "Battle of Gettysburg," she lately returned from Europe to assume in part, that he might accept the honorable appointment offered to him. Mrs. Wormley, who first became expert in drawing, devoted herself to the illustration of a large work which her husband, a distinguished chemist, wrote on crystals. After she had finished the drawings they were sent to some Eastern city to be engraved. A difficulty arose—no engraver could be found willing to undertake the microscopic work required. It was the opinion of engravers who were consulted that only the artist who drew the picture could successfully engrave them. Thus compelled, as it were, by the work, the wife of Dr. Wormley learned the art of engraving, engraved the plates, and enjoys the honor of having contributed so largely to the beauty and completeness of a celebrated scientific treatise. The work in progress of the wonder-working school in Cincinnati, under the direction of Mrs. Pitman, has been highly praised, and will be a unique contribution to the Woman's Department from Ohio.—Woman's Journal.

Girls in New England.

NEVER in the past twenty years has there been such a scarcity of girls for general housework in North Adams, Mass., as at the present time. The local intelligence bureau is overrun with applications for domestics, and is unable to supply the demand, though the highest wages have been offered. This is in a great measure owing to the mills and shoe-shops taking off the best girls, who prefer factory work to general housework, because of the larger wages they are enabled to earn. In sampson's shoe-shop there are girls who are earning $80 per month, and in some of the other shops they can do equally as well. Pittsfield is similarly troubled, and in this latter town some of the women who work in the silk factory on piece-work earn as high as $15 to $20 per week. In fact, at the present time women there can obtain more than men, and are in greater demand, though manual labor is worth $1.25 per day this season, against one dollar last year.—Exchange.

A Horse Trade Spoiled.

I THINK that one of the most fascinating qualities of the child is its love of truth after it has been thoroughly trained to appreciate that troublesome virtue. I saw it illustrated a day or two ago on the occasion of an attempt at barter. The heir of the house owns a pony; a farmer came into the yard with another pony, and also a proposal for an exchange. The points of the strange animal were gravely canvassed by the boy and the ten-year-old sister. When the father came on the scene he was addressed by his eldest daughter in this fashion, and with great rapidity of utterance: "Papa, this is a splendid pony, he don't kick and plunge, and run away, and balk and crib, and he hasn't got any spavin." The trade didn't come off.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Purchasing Trees.

MANY orders are being given in the new Western States for fruit trees, and it is more than probable that some tree agents and peddlers are employing the same methods in securing such orders as have been made use of heretofore. We venture a word of warning to those who desire to purchase fruit trees (as we have often done heretofore) in regard to buying of itinerant agents. There are those engaged in the business who deal fairly with their customers, delivering trees as per contract, and honorably fulfilling their obligations; but all tree agents are not of this stripe. They carry with them jars containing large specimens of natural fruit, and claim that the trees they sell will produce just such fruit as are shown by the samples. Generally this is the merest pretense.

A correspondent in a Western State wrote us not long since that certain parties of the genus "tree peddler," traveled in portions of that State last season armed and equipped with pictures, of wonderful fruits, and also exhibited large and attractive fruits in jars, claiming to sell nothing that would not produce fruit equal to the specimens shown. They gathered in from $5,000 to $8,000 worth of orders last summer; the stock delivered in September, and it could not have been well-ripened wood suitable for transplanting at that time. Very little of this stock lived—nor is it surprising that such was the case. What, every year, this unfortunate experience is repeated, and if complaints are made to the agents, they are answered, if noticed at all, with a chuckle of neglect or improper treatment in setting out the trees, or subsequent mismanagement. These things are a great study to the ingenuity of peddlers and cutters-grift, may be divided or ground, according to the old or new process employed. While the former has its carried advocates, who insist that pomace finely ground yields cloudy or muddy liquor, the latter has the greatest number of followers. Cider made in a large press, other things being equal, keeps better than that which is made in a small hand-press. A richer, fuller-flavored and better-colored beverage is obtained when the pomace is allowed to remain in the vat twenty-four hours and turned occasionally to induce fermentation, before the juice is expressed. The reason of the change, by the way, is largely influenced by the management of the pulp. Different kinds of apples impart different flavors, but from any one kind two distinct varieties of cider may be produced, the one by expressing the juice before any change of color occurs from exposure of the pomace to the atmosphere, and the other after this exposure. In champagne cider, therefore, when a light-colored liquor is desired, the juice is pressed from the pomace immediately after the latter is ground.

Making and Keeping Sweet Cider.

WITH each recurring season lovers of cider make anxious inquiries from the cities sections of the country in relation to best methods for keeping this beverage sweet throughout the year. Many claim a prime article from the time apples are fit to grind in the fall until the work is progress of the weather-ing school in Cincinnati, under the direction of Mrs. Pitman, has been highly praised, and will be a unique contribution to the Woman's Department from Ohio.—Woman's Journal.

Professions! cider-makers claim that cloth is far better than straw in the press, as that cloth-cider gains better prices than straw-cider. Here agree farmers at last, differ, and the only conclusion to be arrived at is that an excellent article can be obtained, either way. Whisky or brandy barrels have the first preference. If they cannot be obtained, the casks into which the cider is put must be clean and sweet. Barrels may be thoroughly cleansed with lime, or wood-ashes and water. In addition to this is it always best to fumigate with matches of roll brimstone dropped into the bung, afterward rinsing the barrel with hot water and draining dry. When the barrels are filled they should be placed with bungs up on blocks or skids in a cool cellar, or in any sheltered place in the open air where the temperature will not fall below sixty degrees or increase above seventy-five degrees Fahrenheit. An active saccharine fermentation will begin in a few hours, and ought to be allowed to continue with the bung loose until the hissing sound so readily distinguished when carbonic-acid gas is escaping shall cease. As the pumace and froth during this process of fermentation work out at the bunghole, it is well to fill up each day with some juice of the same pressing reserved for this purpose. The cider is now ready for the first racking. After being racked and drawn off into other barrels, the bung should be placed in slightly for a few days and then loosened to permit further fermentation. The cider may now be racked again and the bungs tightly closed. If intended for draught use, leave it in the cask and avoid further bottling—which is the only certain means of keeping cider unchanged indefinitely without the aid of some antiseptic agent—this should be accomplished not later than the early spring. Boston manufactories employ various clarifying agents and refine cider with isinglass, fish sounds, etc. Sounds the simplest and easiest to procure, and will suit the taste of most people, will be found

It is alleged that Tilden contributed $20,000 for the special purpose of defeating Congressman Reed in Maine, in revenge for the lively manner in which Mr. Reed cross-examined him in the cipher dispatch examination.

Gen. Weaver, the Greenback presidential candidate, expects to carry Texas, Virginia and perhaps Indiana; and if the Democrats of Maine prefer to run a ticket of their own and give that state to Garfield, he says it is their business and not his.

"General Grant can write a letter," says the Graphic. "There are battles in his letters. They are plain, incisive, direct business documents. Not a word is wasted, but the writer's idea is presented in a way which any one can understand. If the slander that Grant is a commonplace man and creature of accident needed any refutation, his letters, brief and informal as they all are, would supply all the refutation required. Let some of the statesmen try their hands at saying as much in as small space as General Grant in his hurried letter to General Arthur, read at the Academy of Music meeting recently, and then tell us how long the effort occupied their time and attention." Which reminds us of what General Butler once said about Grant's speeches. During the '72 campaign some Democrat, thinking to cause ridicule published a tiny pamphlet of twelve pages, about an inch square, entitled, "The Public Addresses, Orations, etc., of Ulysses S. Grant LL. D." It was a very clever burlesque, for Grant has confined his public utterances before that time to such laconic speeches as "Pitch things," "We'll fight it out on this line, etc.," and "Let us have peace." But General Butler, in making a speech one evening, held up these tiny pages before his audience, and said: "Here, gentlemen, is a wholesome truth that was intended for a campaign lie. General Grant has been so busy doing things that he has been compelled to make his talking very brief. He lets other people do his boasting." The audience saw the point and these little burlesques were in great demand.

DR. P. P. TALBOTT, editor and proprietor of the Greenback Standard at Maryville, Mo., was shot and fatally wounded late on the night of the 18th, at his residence near that place. He was seated at a window reading when some unknown person fired through the window at close range, the ball first cutting off two of his fingers and then passing entirely through his side, inflicting a wound from which he died the next day. His son rushed to the door and fired, but without effect, at a retreating form in the darkness, and the assassin escaped without leaving any clew to his identity.

The towns to hear from gave in 1879 a Fusion majority of 167. The returns will give Plaisted a plurality of 115 if the towns to be heard from vote as last year." The Constitutional amendments, providing that a candidate for Governor may be elected by a plurality vote, and changing the date of the State election from September 8 to November, were brought to have been adopted. An August telegram of the same date says it was evident the vote was close, and it was quite probable only the official canvass of returns would decide who was elected.

DURING the session in Chicago on the 20th of the National Liberal Convention, while the platform reported from committee was under discussion, Colonel R. G. Ingersoll objected to the resolution calling for the unconditional repeal of the laws against the transmission of obscene literature through the mails and offered a substitute providing that, in all cases where arrests were made for such transmission, the matter should be referred to the Committee on Defense, who should ascertain whether the arrested party was honest in what he had done, and believed that he had only transmitted that which was for the public good, and, in case of a favorable finding by the committee, that accused should be protected and defended by the Leagues. A lengthy debate ensued, the existing controversy originating in the rejection of the Ingersoll substitute and the adoption of the ... resolution, slightly amended. Thereupon Col. Ingersoll resigned the position of Vice-President of the League, stating that he could no longer act with the organization, as he differed with it in this, as he considered it, important particular.

A MAN of the name of Harmer was in Saginaw, the other day, looking after a lost wife. He had not seen her for the past twelve months, having been in the lumber woods. He finally found her living with another man, whom she claimed as her husband. She said she had obtained a divorce from Harmer, was living very comfortably with her present husband, and had no desire to have anything to do with her first love. Harmer did not seem to take the matter to heart much, but left her to her new happiness.

Dulcigno.

HISTORY tells us two things in particular of Dulcigno. At the beginning of the sixteenth century and for more than a century afterwards it was the most famous den of pirates in the Adriatic, and later on, when Charles II. was King of England, the place harbored a man on whom the eyes of all the Jewish and a great part of the Mohammedan world had once been turned. This was Sabbatai Zewi, a Smyrnese Jew, who gave himself out for the Messiah. In what proportions Sabbatai was an enthusiast, and in what an impostor, it would be hard to say. He was deeply read in Talmudic literature, and appeared to believe in his mission. At the same time he used the wealth which his father had left him to excellent purpose in securing adherents; and the care he took of such details as his dress, always austere but always becoming, and his beautiful face and beard, have a suspicious air. His name spread all over the world, and in Germany in particular his adherents were counted by thousands. By 1666 his fame had reached such a height that it was necessary for him to do something definite to prove his claims. He therefore set out for Constantinople to defy once the Sultan through the power of his word. The Sultan temporized with him at first, but was eventually able to drive him into a corner, and under threat of execution Sabbatai went over to Islam. He was then banished to Dulcigno, as a remote corner of the Empire, where there were no Jews to be found; and there he died in 1676. Curiously enough, the reception he got from the Moslems of Dulcigno was far from losing all his followers. Rabbis learned in the Cabala soon found out that the Messiah had to adopt the faith of Mahommed, so as to draw the Moslems after him and there were thousands of good Mohammedans who now believed in him as ardently as did the Jews. After his death his tomb at Dulcigno became a shrine sought by pilgrims from all parts of the world.

The latter of Old Dulcigno is one of the oldest on the Adriatic and the best that exists on that harborless coast between the southern point of Dalmatia and the mouth of the Drin. The haven is a sure safeguard from the south wind—the terrible sirocco—but is exposed on its northern side. There are about a dozen huts now on the beach, making a little settlement, exclusively Albanian, and called Ilmani. In the beginning of the sixteenth century the appearance of the harbor was very different. The town fell into Turkish hands very late in 1571, and the Turkish Governor of Skutari, who was responsible for the district, proved incompetent or unwilling to check the piracy which gave Dulcigno an evil name in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The light Dulcignote barques descended on the Italian, Albanian, even Greek coasts. The Porte undertook to put them down, but the Governor of Skutari, himself always addicted to piracy, and a near relation by marriage of the Turkish garrison having previously got away by sea. Austria, however, at the Berlin Congress, objected to its retention by Montenegro and Gusinje and Plava were substituted—with what result all the world knows.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Men and Horses.

THE 156-hour race between men and horses, at Chicago, last week, ended in a victory for man. Byrne, a new pedestrian, who is scarcely twenty yet, scored 342 miles as his six-day record, and stopped Saturday with a score of 578 miles. The leading horse finished ten miles behind him. The Chicago papers call the contest a "great" one, of course, but without finding fault with that, it may be said that they are quite in error in describing it as "the first of the kind ever given." Last October there was a similar contest in San Francisco, but then a horse won, with a six-day record of 559 miles. However, the list of such contests—we believe there have been others—is happily a brief one, and, stopping outside of it, there are authentic records of remarkable rides which are far more interesting than such objectless displays of grim endurance as the Chicago performance. In 1847 General J. C. Fremont and two companions covered 800 miles across a roadless and mountainous country in 158 hours, only 100 of which were spent in the saddle. Of course they had a frequent change of horses, three mounts under saddle being driven ahead and passed when wanted. This is perhaps the most remarkable horseback ride on authentic record. Two or three years ago nine Italian officers undertook a ride of 810 miles in nine days, and the exact performance which might be expected of ordinary horses in war. Only three finished the distance, and they required 198 hours for the task. Some time before this another Italian officer rode 320 Italian miles in twenty-six hours on a single horse. From Vienna to Paris is 900 miles as the crow flies. Prince de Linge once covered the road between the two cities in six days, but with relays of horses. Count de Maistonay is said to have done it in less time on a single roadster. He was then the bearer of the consent of the Emperor of Austria to the marriage of Napoleon and Marie-Louise, and he was rewarded for his speed with a jeweled snuff-box, 8,000f., and the horse which carried him so well. It is said that he rode the whole way without dismounting, but that is scarcely credible. The conditions are so different that it is impossible to compare those feats with those of last week at Chicago, but it seems reasonably certain that neither on horseback nor on foot can the rate of 100 miles be kept up for more than five days, and that there are men who can do the distance at least as quickly without a horse as with one.—N. Y. Times.

Just Where He Had 'Em.

HALF an hour before the departure of a lake steamer from her wharf yesterday the Captain was approached by a stranger who had been inspecting the boat from the dock for the last few minutes. Introducing himself as a woodlot passenger, he asked:

"Captain, is this boat provided with life-preservers?"

"She is."

"Are they all right?"

"They are."

"Can your crew launch a life-boat?"

"They can."

"Is your life-raft all right?"

"It is."

"Is the fire-hose all ready for instant service?"

"It is."

"Will your engineer stand to his post in case of disaster?"

"He will."

"Do you call yourself a cool and collected man in the presence of danger?"

"I do."

"Do you know exactly what you would do in case of a terrible gale or a fire?"

"I do."

"Can the mate be depended on to second all your efforts?"

"He can."

"And will your crew stand by you and obey you?"

"They will."

"Are your green and red lights all right?"

"They are."

"Machinery in perfect order?"

"It is."

"Going to overload the boat?"

"No, sir."

"Expect to do any racing?"

"No, sir."

"Is she fixed to blow off at forty-six pounds?"

"She is."

"Donkey-engine working all right?"

"It is."

The stranger heaved a deep sigh and was walking away when the Captain asked if his baggage was aboard.

"No, and I guess I'll go ashore," was the reply. "Every boat which has burned up or gone down for the last five years had everything in the nicest kind of order, and I'll either look for a craft making six feet of water an hour or take to bed with a starting-point."—Detroit Free Press.

Stored-up Knowledge of Use.

ALL knowledge is good, and sooner or later may be put to use. In emergencies a demand is suddenly made for accurate information. It cannot be obtained at the moment, though it would be of great value if one had previously acquired it.

Mr. Webster used to tell with great zest an incident in his professional life, which illustrates this fact. In his early practice he had for a client an old man in danger of losing a little legacy bequeathed by will. The complications in the will were so intricate that Mr. Webster became interested in the case, and sent for legal books to New York, which cost him more than fifty dollars. Studying these, he gained his case, but at a great loss to his pocket, as his client was unable to adequately compensate him. Some years after, while visiting New York, the celebrated Aaron Burr called on him for consultation. He told Mr. Webster that a will case, in which he was engaged, had given him great perplexity and quite baffled him. He stated the difficulties, which were identical with those which Mr. Webster had previously mastered. He gave an instant solution of the puzzle. Mr. Burr listened in wonder, and asked: "Have you been consulted in this case, Mr. Webster?"

"I have never heard of it till you stated it."

Mr. Burr's wonder deepened.

"I have been study ng it for weeks, sir, and could see no way out of it. How could you settle it so promptly?"

Mr. Webster told him of the previous case, which had involved the same principles, and Mr. Burr had a hearty laugh over his fancy that his friend must be gifted with supernatural wisdom. Mr. Webster's early study brought him a $500 fee at that late day.—Youth's Companion.

The Flash of Lightning.

THE apparatus which, in our laboratories, enables us to measure the time which light, moving at nearly two hundred millions per second, takes to pass over a few feet, is required to prove to us that lightning is not absolutely instantaneous. Wheatstone has shown that it certainly lasts less than a millionth part of a second. Take this, along with Swan's datum, which I have just given you, and you see that the apparent brightness of the landscape, as lit up by a lightning flash, is less than one hundred thousandth part of what it would be were the lightning permanent. We have thus rough material for instituting a comparison between the intrinsic brightness of lightning and of the sun. Translant in the extreme as the phenomenon is, we can still, in virtue of the duration of visual impressions, form a tolerably accurate conception of the form of a flash; and in recent times instantaneous processes of photography have given us permanent records of it. These, when compared with photographic records of ordinary electric sparks, bear out in useful the convictions at once forced by appearances on the old electricians, that a flash of lightning is merely a very large electric spark. The peculiar zig-zag form, sometimes apparently almost doubling back on itself, the occasional bifurcations, and various other phenomena of a lightning flash, are all shown by the powerful sparks from an electric machine. The spectroscope has recently given us still more striking evidence of their identity, if any such should be wanted. The bifurcations of a flash are puzzling no one who is experimentally acquainted with electricity, but the zig-zag form is not quite so easily explained. Rectitude would be natural in the case of short sparks by heating the air. Now, heating in a tube or flame not only gets rid of inertia and other combustible materials but it also removes all traces of electrification from air. It is possible, then, that the zig-zag form of lightning flash may, in certain cases at least, be due to local electrification, which would have the same sort of effect as heat in rarefying the air and making it a better conductor. A remark is made very commonly in thunder-storms which, if correct, would obviously inconsistent with what I have said as to the extremely short duration of a flash. Many eye-witnesses closely follow movements of such extraordinary rapidity. Hence it is clear that when people say they saw a flash gnaw its way to the clouds from the ground, or downward from the clouds in the ground, they must be mistaken. The origin of the mistake seems to be a subjective one, viz.: that the central parts of the retina are more sensitive than the outlying parts of the rest, and therefore that the portion of the flash which is seen directly affects this brighter portion of the eye. Hence a spectator looking toward either end of a flash very naturally fancies that it has been a starting-point.—Prof. Tait, in Nature.

Roller Skating.

THE fashionable dissipation at Nantucket is roller skating. There is a rink here that I am told is crowded every night with gentlemen and ladies, more or less, I mean, less and more. It is a beautiful sport, they tell me. And I have no doubt it is, as exercise at once healthful and graceful. I have not roller-skated, any myself. I could, if I wished, but I do not wish to roller-skate any this summer. I prefer to enjoy my skating vicariously. I find it pleasanter, as much pleasanter, to look on and see the other people enjoy the poetry of motion. They tell me that I will soon after an hour's exercise on the skates. I should think it after a man has swept up half a peck of pine slivers with his bones and that sort of thing, that he would be ready to go to sleep after he got them all pulled out. I have been a very careful observer of roller skating, and it always seemed to me that the principal part of the exercise consisted in getting up. One evening in Burlington I watched a young man fall down twenty-nine times while skating about three miles and a half. Now, he might have gone over to the Standard office and fallen down the front stairs, and got just the same number of bumps in a much shorter period of time and distance. Why, I have seen men skating around a summer rink, so fat and clumsy that they looked like wooden porcupines with clothes on. And yet they said they liked it.

A man can fall down on roller skates in greater variety than he can on anything else. He can go down in two runs and fifty motions, and then he gets down at last he is right where he started, and fully eighteen feet from where he expected to be. His element of uncertainty makes it very exciting and fascinating.

I have been proof against all manner of wiles and bribes in this matter of roller skates. I have sneered myself by my steadfastness; I who am prone to do anything anybody asks me to do, to hold out against this thing all summer. I fear I am really becoming good. But while I am always glad and happy if I can afford people amusement, I don't like to amuse them by making a fine sin-emulsion of myself. I once heard Mr. Beecher say that a man who had very little dignity had to be very careful of what little he had. I have an objection in the world to roller skating, but for my part I can sit down almost as quickly and ten times as comfortably without the skates.—Burdette's Letter to the Hawkeye.

Field Experiments.

WE have had frequent occasion to notice the leading position taken by the Essex County Agricultural Society in the cause of agricultural improvements. The Essex Society holds annual fairs at which liberal premiums are paid for the best animals and farm products exhibited, but it does not stop there. It appropriates sums of money that would often be used by other societies in sports and more, for encouraging such field experiments as shall tend to the permanent improvement of farm practices, and to the increase of actual knowledge upon farm matters.

But the best feature we have noticed this year is an offer of twenty-five dollars for the most satisfactory experiments to settle certain questions concerning the growth of potatoes, the experiments to continue through a period of five consecutive years. Among the questions to be worked upon are, whole, medium sized seed, in place of cuttings of the eyes; the effect of continuous planting of small seed; the difference between hilling and flat culture; effects of cutting off seed of potatoes before planting; effects of deep and shallow planting; growing crops from sprouts alone for a series of years, from the same strain; whether varieties having dwarf vines can be planted more closely; the best distance apart in drill culture, and the effect of repeated covering of the tops with earth after they are up. The experiments must be conducted on areas of not less than one-quarter of an acre of land, of uniform quality of soil, and all the same kind and quantity of manure and cultivation, and to be inspected by the committee at the time of gathering the crops.

The results from experiments like these, if well conducted, will be worth more to the members of the society and to the public at large, than the income from all the lotteries, beer stands, auction stands and gambling schemes that could be gathered upon every cattle show ground the society has ever occupied since its organization.

With the multiplicity of fairs and the rivalry between contiguous societies, many of the older organizations are finding it quite difficult to make both ends meet at the end of the year, after paying the premiums, interest on debts, and the expenses for annual repairs on buildings, fences and track, and the feeling is growing quite prominent in the minds of the public generally that Agricultural Societies have seen their best days. But if farmers would learn that the object of such organizations is to educate the people, and would then strive to develop the best means for accomplishing that object, as the Essex Society has ever done, they would find a deep interest in those associations returning.

We have now all become more or less familiar with the best breeds of cattle, sheep and swine, the best apples, pears and grapes, and the most desirable varieties of potatoes, but the question now is to learn the best methods of producing these superior cattle, fruits and vegetables, a subject that has received far too little attention on the part of managers of agricultural and horticultural societies.

Let the future work of the societies be to study rather than to show; to add to the stock of knowledge rather than to constantly repeat the exhibit of what is already becoming commonplace. The field is a very broad one. We allude to the matter now knowing that trustees of agricultural societies at their annual meetings will introduce measures that will tend to improve, instead of barely keeping alive, their waning organizations.—New England Farmer.

The Pig Question.

SHALL the pig of the future be a spherical package of "animate lard," without an; mast to speak of, or preferably a "razor-back" type, with bristles and vertebræ, a modicum of tough muscle, with scarcely enough of the oleaginous to grease the griddle? It may not be wise to run to porcine extremes. In medio tutissimus ibis. On one hand we may not avoid extremes by breeding off the extremities; on the other, the cultivation of legs may prove a legacy of evil. The nose must long remain a foremost feature, but it should not remain too long. "Root, hog, or die" may be a barbarous maxim, yet all corn and no roots tends not to health, and assuredly not to longevity. The desirability of the two types is plain: on the one has more of spirit, the other of grace; one the embodiment of restlessness, the other of inertia; the agile type has more of energy and health, the sedentary hog has possibly signs of scrofula. If the latter is not fit to eat, the former is fit for nothing else. The "pig of the period" should not resemble an exclamatory point.

It is possible, on the other hand, that "improvement" may be carried too far, encircling health to enfeeblity and accumulation edible lessons to fat. The production of meat, the most in the shortest time, is a law of economic production that must preclude all use of the razor-back variety, and tend toward symmetry and contentment. At the same time, pampering and overfeeding, and breeding to excessive fat, contravene in a high degree the same economic law by causing disease, often wholesale destruction. The extension of "cholera" is coeval with this improvement and overfeeding with cure to the exclusion of grass and the wholesome variety demanded by this omnivorous animal. Let the breeder have still some regard for companions and symmetry, but give the animal wide range, good pasture, spare and constant growth, variety of feed in fattening, and early preparation for the knife, and the result will prove alike satisfactory to pocket and palate.—N. Y. Trib.

Too Much Insurance.

INTOXICATION has been offered as a defense of a case of alleged murder for insurance. A short time ago a man named John Brandt, aged seventy-two, appeared in Selins Grove, near Sunbury, Pa. A mania for insurance speculation exists among the inhabitants. A man named Byers effected an insurance on Brandt's life for $12,000, and promised to keep him all his natural life. Another party named Hilbert, cashier of a neighboring bank, effected a policy of $10,000 on the old man's life, the insurance being effected by one Gardner, a traveling agent. Soon after the old Brandt was poisoned ill-treatment, and wandered off a few days ago. He again returned, but the proprietor of the hotel, who had taken the first insurance, motioned him off.

The next heard or seen of him here was when his body was found early the next morning on the railroad not far away. The cars would not stop, the gobbies were seen in consultation the day before the old man was found dead. The opinion generally prevailed that the old man had met with foul play, and a Coroner is now making an investigation and a post mortem is being made.

It is believed by many that Brandt was killed and thrown on the railroad. It is beginning to look like the celebrated Parker murder case at Lebanon, in which the "blue-eyed six" were implicated.—N. Y. Telegram.

ONE of the best things in the world to give a horse, after he has been driven, is a quart of oatmeal stirred into a pail of water. It refreshes and strengthens him, relieves his thoroughly, and prepares his stomach for more solid food.

WASHING OVER BISCUITS.—Stale cream biscuits can be so nicely warmed over that none can object to eating them. They may be broken apart, and a quarter of an hour before tea, should be dipped separately into a bowl of clear water, and replaced in the baking tin in the oven. They should simply be heated through, but not brown or crisp.

As a remedy for grub-worms, a correspondent of the Kansas Post recommends the use of coarse salt. He says: "Last autumn I sprinkled over 125 hills, which was troubled with the white grub (that of the June bug); about a bushel of salt over about every hundred feet square, and as much more this spring. Some of it stirring in early rain—and notwithstanding this summer a long drought my lawn is in excellent condition."

TOMATO SAUCE.—Take six large, or eight small, ripe tomatoes; cut them up, adding a small onion, a little celery, and a little thyme, tablespoonful of butter, half a tablespoonful of sugar, the same of salt, and a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper, and on the fire set away slowly; when it has boiled until the tomatoes are thoroughly done, add a tablespoonful of flour, half pint of boiling milk, and a little cayenne pepper; strain it through a sieve, put back in saucepan, and let it stew until it adheres a little to the spoon.

SECURE PERFECT WHITE STARCH.—George Geddes, of New York, says: "The grating and grinding of starch, but I do not think is sufficient alone to accomplish all we want. My plan is to first select the finest seeds, which are as we have a perfect table to the efficiency of the machinery, and unbounded faith in the truth of all that is said good of them."

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY-LIVER CURE

THREE OF THE BEST BOOKS FOR SINGING CLASSES.
THE TEMPLE.
$1. or $9 per dozen. By Dr. W. O. PERKINS.
Such a full sized book at the above low rate is a marvel to our musical public. After you have been through it in a regular elementary course, have sung the shorter Songs and Glees, its Spiritual Songs, its Hymns, Tunes and Anthems, you have at hand a large collection which is just the thing for Choir practice, and also for Home singing. Dr. Perkins is well known as one of our most skilful compilers.
THE VOICE OF WORSHIP.
$1. or $9 per dozen. By L. O. EMERSON.
This book serves precisely the same ground as does the TEMPLE, and people will use one or the other as they fancy the words or the style of the music. Both are excellent composers. Mr. Emerson's books are known in every household and every school, and each new book is intended to be an advance over those that preceded it.
JOHNSON'S METHOD FOR SINGING CLASSES.
60 Cts., or 6$ per dozen. By A. N. JOHNSON.
No better guide to its ends in the perfect clearness and simplicity of his explanations and the thoroughness of his work. The teacher who uses this method avoids failure. Use it and the Choice Series Instruction Book, ($1.25), by the same author. The pages overspread, and the large book gives direction for the use of the smaller.

ALL but two of the Democratic candidates for Presidential Electors in California are Southern born men.

THE Georgia State election will take place to-morrow, and the Indiana, Ohio and West Virginia State elections come off to-day.

WM. HAYMOND, editor and proprietor of the Muskegon Chronicle, has been nominated for Representative by the Republicans of Muskegon county.

IT is reported that Henry Ward Beecher is about to take the stump for Garfield and Arthur, and that he will speak in Indiana, Ohio, New York and Connecticut.

A RECENT canvass of Sing Sing prison showed 1,964 for Hancock and four for Garfield. The figures must be authentic as the canvass was taken by a Republican.

THE vote on the amendment in Maine is thus reported: To elect Governor a plurality, 38,573 for, and 37,131 against; to extend the term of Senators and Representatives to two years, 42,761 for, and 18,184 against.

DURING the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, there were manufactured in this country 90,335,270 gallons of spirits, against 71,892,621 for the preceeding year, and there were consumed 61,116,820 against 51,392,714.

THE Boston Herald notes that Polk Walker, the Confederate Secretary of War, is likely to be the new United States Senator from Alabama, and says that by and by we shall have a majority of Jeff Davis' Cabinet in Congress.

GEN. HANCOCK has at last yielded to the pressure to declare himself on the subject of rebel claims. He says, if President, he would vote them. But should it come to the point, with a procured Congress to back him, would he do it? Just now he wants northern votes, and in order to secure them would say or promise almost anything. That is the fact of the matter.

GEN. SIMON CAMERON predicts that the Republicans of Pennsylvania will sweep everything this year. And no man in the State can make a more intelligent or reliable prediction than he.

THE Greenbackers have nominated J. H. Onion for Congress in the Third Maryland District. Onion is a strong nomination. The Greenbackers say they will make the Democrats shed tears when they put him in November.

THE New York Republicans, on a check upon frauds, propose to publish the names and residences of all the persons naturalized in the courts of that city, with the names of witnesses, etc. The Democrats will call this an octopus on a "free ballot."

THE principal speakers at the big Democratic meeting in New York, last Thursday evening, were two prominent excelsiors—Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, and Ben Hill of Georgia. That's the kind of men to arouse enthusiasm in a morning of New York city Democrats.

A CALL is published from the headquarters of the Union Veterans National committee, calling upon union soldiers and sailors of the United States to meet in convention at Indianapolis, Thursday, Oct 7, 1880. It is signed by U. S. Grant as Commander in Chief. It will be the big meeting of this year.

"DOWN the Irish; the country would be better off without them," are the exact words of candidate English, of Indiana, according to the oath of John Smith, an Irish drayman of Indianapolis, who was trying to get satisfaction from English's horse railroad for the killing of his little daughter by a street car.

THE latest political sensation in Indiana is the simultaneous "flop" of two leading Greenbackers. The Greenback candidate for Secretary of State and the Greenback candidate for State Senator in the Indianapolis district, have withdrawn from their party and joined the Bourbon Democracy. It is a clear case of selling.

A NOVEL bet on the approaching election has been entered into between twenty business men of Mount Pulaski, Ill., consisting of ten Democrats and ten Republicans, that if Hancock is elected, the ten Republicans are to wheel the ten Democrats around the square, in procession, and if Garfield is elected, the Democrats wheel the Republicans. This will be fun for somebody.

GENERAL Plaisted, the Fusion candidate for Governor of Maine, was Colonel of the Eleventh Maine Infantry during the war. He was a Republican member of the Maine Legislature in 1869, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention held the same year. He was the Republican Attorney General of Maine from 1870 to 1875, and after such a Republican member of Congress.

GENERAL GARFIELD AS A PILOT.

From the Indianapolis Journal.

In January, 1862, while General (then Colonel) Garfield was pursuing Humphrey Marshall's force in Kentucky, his troops found themselves far up the Sandy river, almost out of rations. The weather was rough and the river very high. Colonel Garfield had gone down to the mouth of the river to see about sending up supplies, and start up. The captain declared it was impossible; that no boat could stem the raging current. Garfield ordered him to load up, and he would pilot the boat himself. The steamer being loaded, he placed an officer on deck to watch the captain, and he himself took the wheel. The voyage was difficult and dangerous; the river was full of heavy driftwood. The utmost speed the steamer could make was less than four miles an hour. It was on Saturday that the boat left the mouth of the Sandy. All night, all day Sunday, and all through Sunday night the voyage continued, amid perils which threatened every instant to wreck the steamer. Monday morning they reached the camp. During the entire trip, two nights and one day, Garfield stood at the wheel, with the exception of eight hours during the day, which he seized for a little rest. Such incidents as this prove a man's character. A man who could pilot a steamboat under such perilous circumstances as these, to relieve the troops of his command, standing at the wheel nearly thirty-six hours, will make a safe pilot for the ship of State.

It appears more than ever that much of Hancock's military fame was worked up. The Buffalo Express says: "Generals Meade and Howard were thanked by vote of Congress on the 25th of January, 1864, for their services at the battle of Gettysburg. A similar compliment was not paid General Hancock until April 25, 1866. This delay of two years and a quarter looks as though Congress was not very strongly impressed with the brilliancy of the latter General's services until interested parties took some pains to work the matter up and make Congressmen understand what great things they had overlooked while the war was going on."

DE LA MATYR has been there and found out, like Weaver. In an interview with a correspondent of the Louisville Commercial, he tells how he regrets his past political record. He says it is impossible for him to be a Democrat. His predictions are for Republicanism, and it has been a vain struggle for him to enter the Democratic ranks. His recent experiences in Alabama have convinced him that the pictures of that benighted land painted by Republicans are not overdrawn. Free speech is impossible there.

THE Kenosha [Mo.] Journal publishes returns from the entire State, showing totals as follows: Davis, Republican, 75,360; Plaisted, Democrat, 70,990; Smith, Greenback, 73,380, scattering, 475. This gives Davis 190 over Plaisted, but lacks 126 of being a majority over all. The Democrats dispute these figures however, claiming that Plaisted has a plurality of about 300 over Davis. The official count will be necessary to decide the dispute, and that cannot be done till the Legislature meets in January next.

AT Batavia, Ohio, on the 20th, Congressman J. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky, made a speech in which he said: "Let the radicals cease their howl about a solid south; she is solid, thank God. She was solid for Jeff Davis in 1860, and she will be solid for Hancock in 1880." These words were parodied down at the moment, and are given with accuracy. Bonner, but not all, of the Democrats present applauded.

A PROMINENT Democrat in Washington says that if Hancock is elected, he will appoint August Belmont Secretary of the Treasury. Belmont is a New York banker, is a Jew, and is estimated to be worth $20,000,000. He is a relative of the Rothschilds, and the American member of that great banking house is Jesse. With him as Secretary of the Treasury, Wall street sharks would be in clover.

THE "Mississippi plan" has been introduced into Southern Indiana, where there is a large negro population, and "night riders" are out, making threats and attempting to frighten the colored people by posting alarming handbills on their doors, and other kuklux performances.

FOUR of the most prominent Democrats of Chautauqua county, New York, have come out for Garfield and Arthur: Hon. Forrest Sheldon, a Tilden elector in 1876; James L. Whitney, a wealthy manufacturer; Dr. John Lord and James I. Fowler, a leading lawyer.

Return of a Sir John Franklin Search Party Now Buffered.

HOWGATE, KING, September 25.

The bark Gerome and Mary, Captain Baker, has just arrived at New Bedford from Hudson's Straits, bearing news from the Arctic regions. The Franklin search party, under Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, U. S. A., are passengers on board the Gerome and Mary, and have been the recipients of much kindness from Captain Baker and his subordinate officers and men. After returning to Depot Island, from a sledge journey of 300 miles, occupying seventy-seven days and ninety-six hours, they were reduced to the verge of starvation through the brutality of Captain Thomas E. Berry, of the whaling schooner Esther, of New York, who stole their remaining provisions to fit out his vessel for an additional whaling voyage. Had it not been for the timely aid offered by Captain Baker they would have suffered extremely, as the native Esquimaux with whom they were living were short of provisions, and had been reduced to the necessity of eating some of their dogs on two previous occasions during the winter season. King William Land is the scene of considerable activity.

During the summer of 1879 Lieutenant Schwatka's party established the fact that the previous records of Sir John Franklin's existence, which were found in the year 1859, were entirely destroyed by the Netcumlic Esquimaux, who found them in a cairn and to see when they broke open and whose contents they scattered to the winds more than thirty years ago.

The party have secured many interesting and valuable records of the various searches of Lieutenant John Irving, third officer of the Terror, by a silver prize medal awarded to him for the discovery of the last grave. Irving was found in his opened grave. During the return trip the party experienced terrible severe cold over experienced by white men while traveling, and lived upon the same fare, such as dog meat, seal blubber, meat, and fish, as did their native Esquimaux assistants.

The party left New York on the 19th of June, 1878, in the schooner Esther, and proceeded direct to Cumberland Gulf, as it was called, in North Hudson Bay, latitude sixty-three degrees fortyseven seconds north, longitude twenty degrees west, sailing had a pleasant passage up. Here the supplies were landed, and the party established themselves and made preparations to enable them to endure the rigors of the Arctic winter, which they knew was fast approaching. Some stores were secured from animals slain, and soon the party were supplied and ready for business. Abundant supplies of food, arms and ammunition had been provided through the munificence of American generosity, and the process of slaying animals was greatly simplified as the journey progressed. The early summer of 1879 was passed in active research for more light on the fate of Sir John Franklin and his crew.

Lieutenant Schwatka, in his report of the sledge journey, says: "The most important sledge journey ever made, both in regard to time and distance, having been absent from its base eleven months and seventeen days, and having traveled 2,910 geographical or 3,351 statute miles. It is also the most complete journey that has been undertaken by white men in the Arctic wilderness, but I know of none beyond this encompassing more which can be carried on with favorable months of that season; and, in fact, the whole journey was performed in the most under circumstances where comfort commensurate with the exposure could be easily attained from our home quarters. Except in the case of coldest temperature ever recorded on this continent, viz., 70 degrees below zero, was a single observation, 71 degrees Fahrenheit January 3, 1880, but also in regard to protracted cold, there have been no less than sixteen days when the average shows one hundred degrees below zero, and on seventeen twenty-seven days when the thermometer stood below sixty degrees Fahrenheit, during very nearly all of which time the party were prosecuted its journey without severe frost bites, and were in a comparative comfort. In the first Arctic expedition whose sole reliance for the subsistence of itself and its draught animals has been placed directly in the game of the locality, and whose experience in that respect has been spread constantly over every month of the year, with the exception of only one month's full retreat for the consumers, and having been passed in a period already stated. It may not be amiss, however, to state that it was also the finest sledge party that ever entered the Arctic regions, which fact placed it on almost favorable footing for such an experience. It was the first expedition wherein the men of the party lived solely upon the same diet, voluntarily assumed, as the native, which, with fact, coupled with those already stated, shows that white men are not only able to live and serve as Esquimaux in the Arctic region, and with equal comfort, but also to prosecute any projects that their superior intelligence may dictate or their ambition may desire, and under all circumstances that the natives themselves would sanction; venture to undertake far less laudable objects; and it might be further added that the execution of those objects would tend to benefit mankind."

A Forger Run Down.

Silas M. Waite defaulting President of the First National Bank of Brattleboro, Vt., was arrested here to-day by W. H. H. Llewellyn and W. H. Shields, special agents of the Department of Justice. Waite absconded about the 10th of June last, and it was for some time supposed that he had successfully gotten out of the country, and was a fugitive in Europe. He had, it is claimed, uttered forged paper amounting to upward of $200,000, the result being a flood of suits against the directors, brought by stockholders, and ruin to many poor people. It was believed by many and by the directors that he had taken a large sum of money with him, how much could not be determined by searching investigation. The forged paper included the Connecticut River Railroad Company for $50,000; $50,000; Frederick Billings, $30,000; Trenor W. Park, $20,000; Lyon & Healy, of Chicago, $40,000; Treat, of locomotive works, about $12,000; C. J. Amidon, Hinsdale, $15,000; Vermilye & Co., New York, some $75,000, and others.

How much of the paper was used by Waite's confederates in this city and elsewhere could not be ascertained. It is thought he went to Toronto, June 16; had his hair cut there, thence to Detroit, Chicago, St. Paul, Duluth, Brainerd, Fargo, Yorkton, Omaha, thence to La Crosse, Glendon, the Winnipeg country, and back to Omaha, and then back and forth among Western cattle ranches. The cattle ranch which he now visits daily owns in location on the Saskatchewan River, in northern Nebraska, and was bought in the name of another man and his wife over young Waite.—Omaha (Sept. 27) Special to Chicago Times.

REGULARITY and constancy in the pursuit of exercise are important, says The London Lancet. If perfect health is expected to result from its employment. It is far better for many to lead altogether a sedentary life than to be irregularly active. This exemption is the more needed since the transition from sedentary habits to arduous and exhausting physical labor is of frequent occurrence. Again, the transition from active habits to sedentary pursuits is generally accompanied by a marked disturbance of health, since organs formed to full activity by the stimulus exercise gives to them are liable to be functionally deranged when stimulus is withdrawn. This, perhaps, would not be so frequently observed, if instead of relapsing immediately, as we frequently do, into idle habits as far as exercise is concerned, an attempt was made to continue regularly for however short a time, in some pursuit which would insure brisk muscular movement, so that the health required by exercise during the vacation should not be lost; and, moreover, that the body when the next holiday period comes round should be found in fair condition to undertake the increased physical strain thrown upon it.

SARA (Holmes Henry Lafayette) Hamilton, who was killed in a shooting affray with Cherry, and, attracted by the bright young face, had graciously intimated that she would be overjoyed should she should like a companion, and how would Cherry like to live with her and be her adopted girl?

That last was the charm, for Miss Fosilby visited mountains or lakes or hills every year, and something or other even to those other glory-haunted lands which Cherry saw only in dreams. Could that be true? John loved her, and Miss Fosilby would only hire her, to put it politely, but for shame. They would live little home and the Alhambra by moonlight jostled each other oddly in the girl's vision that day.

Decided? How much can one think when one's head is such a babel of sound? The questioning voice of Miss Fosilby, her hand, while a boy in a ragged jacket recounted tediously, as if he were practicing elocutionary rules and had grown a trifle monotonous, how "a band of fierce barbary-asses came down from the North," a little low-headed girl, with mouth half filled with the apple she was surreptitiously munching, and with her father's voice in the house of some friend. But the sound of footsteps near the door of the unattainable, and she heard voices in whispered consultation. Then the steps came nearer, and the door was opened before the carriage.

"I'll s it it," affirmed an outsmiller voice.

"Make sure," was answered in a low tone.

There was a moment's pause, then a match was struck, blamed up for an instant, and was quickly extinguished. Up to brief light Cherry caught only a glimpse of several heads; she discovered no one clearly. But the strangers were apparently satisfied that they had found the object of their search. There was a muttered "All right," and the carriage was slowly turned around.

"Steady now! make no noise!" was whispered warningly, and the carriage was borne carefully to the road, out of the shop and into the road.

Another momentary pause occurred, at some of the party had gone back to fasten the door. Almost, still crouched low on the seat, discovered that the rain had ceased, and through the window shining a gleam of stars. She tested to raise her head for any further observations lest she should be discovered, as, if silence and bewildered, she tried to comprehend her situation. It was a particularly unpleasant one. The carriage had evidently been stolen, and she was being borne away by it, she knew not whither or by whom. These persons, aware of its unwonted presence in Uncle Nat's shop, and coveting its silver trappings, had taken advantage of the chance to steal it, never dreaming that it had an occupant. If they should find her there!

Cherry shuddered as she thought of it. Those who could commit such a crime would scarcely hesitate to conceal it at the cost of one frail life simply to their mercy. How utterly in their power she was she realized more fully as the carriage rolled on again. Miss Fosilby's luxurious carriage, but it could scarcely have sounded more terrible had it been a hangman's cart bearing her to certain execution. She leaned forward with a thought of calling for help, but, who would hear her across those whom she most dreaded? Then came a wild impulse to spring from the moving vehicle and attempt to escape; but that also was abandoned as futile, and she sank back to await the issue in trembling suspense.

It might be miles before they reached their destination, but, if nothing betrayed her presence before, daylight must surely reveal it. How many hours would there be first? Oh, if they only knew it! Aunt Barnara, Uncle Nat, or John—poor John! How he would wonder and search. Would he ever know? She wondered. She half forgot herself in a strange pity for him. That "little home" she had spoken of only last night could never be now. And she could have made it such a bright little nook. Life was very sweet—even the old laundry work and ways that she viewed so scornfully that day; and if hers were to end now—so fearfully—the gilt and glamour it had missed shattered little, but the truth and love it might have held were priceless.

It seemed an interminable time that passed in that strange journeying before there came another halt, and a slight sound as of sliding down bars and unfastening a gate. Then, by the uneven motion, she could tell that the wheels had passed from the beaten road on to rougher ground; and at last they stood still. It had come now, the supreme moment. There was a breath of prayer, a wild longing to look into John's eyes once more, and then she collected all forces of mind and body to do or bear as she might.

Again she heard a whispered colloquy, a low triumphant laugh, and then all sank into silence. The carriage door remained closed, but a dim light shone upon her, and she saw that she was upon the shadowed side of a house—a cabined window, across which shadows flitted as of persons moving within. A faint hope arose in Cherry's heart. It was possible that her captors had all entered the house, and there might be a chance for escape. She could scarcely increase her peril by the attempt, and hurriedly but silently she sprang to the ground. No one was near her, and she flew with such speed as only desperation could lend back in the direction from which she had come. Even as she reached the gateway and passed out upon the road another figure unexpectedly confronted her, and she drew back in breathless terror.

"Hallo!" exclaimed a startled but heavy voice.

With that word she threw herself into his arms.

"Oh, John! John!"

"Why, Cherry! did I frighten you? I was only walking up street in a awful hurry, with no thought of meeting anybody, least of all you, until I nearly ran over you. Have you been spending the evening with Mrs. Murray?"

"Mrs. Murray?" Cherry looked back at the house she had left, and its outlines slowly grew familiar. It certainly was the parsonage. "Oh, I don't know! I thought it must be some dreadful place. I've been stolen and—not quite murdered!" she cried, hysterically. And John, believing to her terror, grew as bewildered as she.

"I should have thought no one would be so insane as to steal that carriage with a hope of selling it; and to select Rev. Mr. Murray's as a place to bestow their booty—"

His pastoral, then laughed as a sudden light burst upon him. "Cherry it's All-Hallowmas!"

"All-Hallowmas! And the village boys always celebrated the occasion by stealing gates, carrying off signs, and working all manner of mischief. Cherry understood it all at once. They had doubtless considered it a magnificent joke to leave Miss Fosilby's carriage in the minister's yard.

"And it is a small mercy that you first learned where my stolen property had been bestowed; I did not quite understand how, but I am greatly obliged to you," she said, graciously.

"It is only nine o'clock. I was just going home from the office."

"Oh!" said Cherry, with a long breath, and a tone that said unutterable things.

"Cherry," said John, as they passed at Aunt Barbara's gate. "this is the night to try fortunes, you know, with hot lead or—"

"Light! I thought I was about to try mine with cold steel," interposed Cherry, shuddering.

"But, Cherry—"

"Yes, I know. It came out all right, John—formed the initials J. A. as plainly as possible," she added, shyly.

John informed Uncle Nat of the whereabouts of the missing carriage; and the next day Miss Fosilby called upon Cherry in that same resplendent equipage.

The blacksmith informed me that you first learned where my stolen property had been bestowed; I did not quite understand how, but I am greatly obliged to you," she said, graciously. "And about that other matter wetalked of one day—I have quite decided that I should like you for a companion."

"Thank you," said Cherry, demurely. "But I have accepted that situation with another person, ma'am."

Miss Fosilby's indifferent eyebrows seemed to ask who else in the sphere of Cherry's knowledge could offer such a position, but her lips were too polite to put the question.

"Well," said Aunt Barbara, as the carriage rolled away, "I guess we'd better built a fire in the back yard and make some soap to-morrow. Plenty of soft soap is a good thing for a young housekeeper to begin with."—Kate W. Hamilton, in Good Company.

ON THE EVE OF THE WEDDING.

O love, before we part to-night,
Before the last "I will" is spoken—
Before the time has touched my head,
Or made, from golden hair, the silken—
Before the flowers, with baby eyes,
Her blessing on our love has given,
Look straight into my eyes and tell me truly,
And answer me in right of Heaven,

Is there within your heart of hearts
One lingering shadow of regret?
One thought, though but a passing sigh,
Oh I speak—it is not too late now yet.
Is there in all this world of ours,
One you have ever known or seen,
Whom, if you had earlier seen or known,
You would have crowned your chosen queen?

Is there? I pray you, tell me now,
And I will bind you bound as one,
I will not think to hear the truth,
It would not be so sad, so sore,
To know it now, as it would be
If by and by, when you and I
Upon the sunny isle of our home,
Should sit and watch the years go by.

I'd hold you here from blame, dear love!
And I would leave you free as air,
To woo and win the one you love,
All this no power that name did bear,
I will not say how small pain
That third night have you in His care;
That would be false—I love you so,
Of you, my heart is all one prayer.

But could I hear her name with yours,
And call them husband and wife,
In her who filled your life of late
My life—my love—my all in all?
Let reason that forbids be dumb,
Let my heart break, I should break,
To say to you, "I wish you joy,"
Through aching tears for your sweet sake.

For looking up into your eyes;
But those I see with God's own aim dim,
I read that in their clear, deep depths,
Which I, poor fool, was blind to see,
Until I felt it loosen my world,
Each answer to my question true,
The deepest wish in your heart of hearts
Is that I may be happy, too.

HOW CHERRY THOUGHT OF IT.

SHE was thinking so intently, this little brown-eyed, brown-haired teacher, that she scarcely noticed the group of girls on the same until, as they moved aside to let her past, she caught a fragment of their conversation.

"Mr. Lind is going to make—runs into such queer shapes, you know, and tells what his composition is going to be—"

"Oh, my! I hope it won't be snow! They rinse it till the name," interrupted another. "Throw 'em over your shoulder, and they fall on you like—like curled up, and make the initials as plain as can be. Why, I saw—hush!"

The last was a hiss, and to her own near approach, and she walked on, smiling faintly at the idea of consulting the tea leaves for one's future, and settle the question that vexed her.

She had promised, rather wearily, when John Barnara called the night before that she would think of it. She might have thought with rosy blushes and softly glad recollections of what happened by a different way—if he had come as a stranger to Glenaville, and there had been many days for her and meeting, the sweet surprise of acquaintanceship growing gradually warmer and dearer into love, rather than sudden knowledge that, though, "Two to the world, for the world's work's sake," they were "each unto each, as in God's sight, one."

For Cherry acknowledged to herself, she did like John, of course he was the truest, noblest, manliest man she knew, and she could never be much of a coarse about it. Why she had known him from the cradle of the deep shell in the bed of the river when he grew up—Hawkeye.

The Republicans of New York carried every town canvass, which gave them 30,000 majority out of the city.

A NEW HAMPSHIRE veteran refuses to vote for his old commander, Hancock, as he don't want to vote against his wooden leg.

THE real issue of the campaign is this, "Shall the party that tried to destroy the government control it?" This issue cannot be hid by either leadership or bolters.

THE Democratic Legislature of Indiana refused to vote food, blankets or medicine to Indiana boys in the army. And now Indiana Democrats claim to be the party of the war. How is that for a specimen of brazen cheek?

THE speech at a recent meeting of the Jackson club at Washington said he had been in the rebel army four years, and helped that sound he accepted as a proof of his Democracy. Such a recommendation as that, like a greenback, is good in all parts of the United States.

WHEN Blaine was nominated for the Governorship for Governor of Maine, he said: "I accept the nomination because I believe I stand in full accord with the Greenback party. I am utterly opposed to the system which would ruin the currency of the country to a specie basis." Hancock, in his recent congratulatory dispatch to Plaisted, said the triumph of those that "go slow." Specie resumption will stand for a record to date with that remark on top in the Government?

UNCLE SAM has so many apples this year that he doesn't know what to do with them. His cellars are full, he has all his cider presses going, and still the fruit lies rotting on the ground. The happy thought strikes him of sending over a few to his British cousins, and nearly 7,000 barrels were shipped on the White Star steamer Britic from New York, the other day. We have sent her Majesty's subjects tons of dried apples every year for a long time but this was the first shipment of any quantity of apples in the natural state.

THE Cincinnati Gazette states that an Indiana Democrat visited a bank in that city on Monday, and expressed the belief that his party would carry Indiana, also that it would cause a decline in Government securities, and acted upon the latter opinion by selling, through the bank, $20,000 in Government bonds. That is a curious illustration of how an intelligent Democrat was driven to his party while believing that its success will endanger the public credit, and bolts against him by selling out his own investment in that same credit.

DEMOCRATS who talk about the Republican party running to "persecute the south" are ignorant of that party, its members and its history. No party ever exercised its greatest power so with so much tender regard for its foes. No party ever treated rebels so generously; no party ever treated its enemies with the same degree of humanity. It is to the party the ex-rebels of the south owe their political rights and exist ence. If that party had been animated by a desire to persecute, there would be no "solid south" existing as a threat against the nation.

THE Democratic party is eminently hostile to the Republican system of finance, of backing and taxation. No one can say what changes might result from the advent of that party to power. The one thing certain is that the changes would be very great. The party has persistently voted against resumption and the methods necessary to maintain it; against national banking and honest treatment of the national banks; against duties on imports which have encouraged a remarkable development of important industries. The party would unquestionably make radical and almost revolutionary changes if it could, and it should elect a President it would have the power. Is it sound policy to even safe policy to take such risks?

A BIG CASE.—Says the Kalamazoo Gazette: "The suit brought by the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad company against the village of Kalamazoo will amount in principal and interest to considerable more than $200,000 before the case is ended. The railroad has gone into this suit in dead earnest, as is evinced by the employment of Jerry Black as counsel in the case. This is a suit against the township of Kalamazoo to recover it to issue $.50,000 worth of railroad aid bonds promised or voted to be issued in aid of the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad, and which never had been delivered to the company, and also to compel it to pay the principal and interest of said bonds. The case is in the U. S. courts.

ANOTHER REPORT.

The Chicago Correspondent Report of the Democratic Convention.

The Democratic convention of Charlevoix county met at the court house in Charlevoix on the 9th inst. and was called to order by Chairman Dr. Genesee. The Secretary, Mr. Bennett, read the call for the convention, which was published in the Sentinel.

A motion was then made that the chair appoint a committee on credentials, consisting of one from each township represented in the convention. The chair appointed Messrs. Bennett, Genesee and Hershberg as said committee.

The committee reported that there were present delegates from all the townships represented in the convention.

The following committees were appointed by the chair:

On Permanent Organization—Messrs. Genesee, Bennett and Hershberg.

On Resolutions—Messrs. Fairbrother, Wisner and Chamberlin.

The committee on permanent organization reported the following officers:

For Chairman, Dr. Genesee.

For Secretary, Mr. Bennett.

The report was accepted and the officers elected.

The committee on resolutions reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the Democracy of Charlevoix county, in convention assembled, do hereby endorse the nomination of Hancock and English, and pledge ourselves to use every honorable effort to secure their election.

Resolved, That we endorse the action of the Democratic members of the Legislature in the passage of the Apportionment bill, and that we endorse the nomination of Judge Fairbrother for Senator, and Messrs. Wisner and Bennett for Representatives, and pledge them our hearty support.

Resolved, That

AT the everlasting express was snorting through Alameda yesterday, on its way to New York, the engineer suddenly whistled down brakes, the conductor frantically shouted and jerked the signal line, and with many a jar and screech the long line of cars was brought to a stop.

The cause of this "sudden fetching" was a fat old lady with a red face and a green parasol, who had planted herself squarely in front of the engine, and was making the most frantic signals for it to pause.

"What's the matter? Anything on the track?" said the engineer, excitedly.

"Nothing but me," said the old lady, stiffly.

"Has there been a crash up? Is there—Mrs. Cruikshanks open?"

"Don't poke fun at me, young man. I want to see the proprietor."

"The what?"

"The man who runs this thing—the captain—or whatever you call him."

"What do you want with the conductor?"

"None of your business. I want to see the head man—the boss—and to once."

"Well, ma'am," said that functionary, running on, watch in hand, "what's up? What can I do for you?"

"You go through Chicago, don't you?"

"Why, of course. What of it?"

"Know my son Bill—Bill Skinderson Jones?"

"No." For Heaven's sake get off the track, you old—

"Don't xass me, you re-l-mosel gorilla, or I'll inform on you. Deary me, I thought everybody knew my boy bill—prominent man there—runs the biggest fruit stand in town, and—hands off, you rascal. Don't dare to tech me. I'll move when I'm good and ready."

"Well, hurry up. What do you want?"

"Oh! thought you'd change yer tune. Well, I wish you'd just stop over a day or two at Chicago and look up Bill and tell him that little Marial Jane's Jarders have broke worked round into fits, and there's more hopes. She's sorter—"

"Start her up, Jimmy!" yelled the furious conductor; and if the old lady hadn't hustled up her skirts and jumped herself, she would have had a first-class case of damages against the company. After that she stood apoplectic with rage, shaking her parasol at the disappearing train, and anathematizing her determination to go right over "and see Governor Standard the very minute the dishes were washed."—San Francisco Post.

Timely Help.

There are few parents who are not willing to give their sons a start in life, if they can—to set them up in business, to breed and foster their pecuniary interests until they can manage for themselves. But most parents seem to feel that when daughters have finished their education and become of age there is little more to be done for them. They must marry or become domestic drudges, or more stay-at homes, looking for no wage for services rendered, and not expected to render any stated services or to receive any fixed or regular income. If they prefer to set up for themselves they must enter upon some occupation which is likely to afford them a present support, without any outlook for the future other than a lifelong hand-to-hand struggle for daily bread.

Now, there are a great many girls who are eagerly looking toward the professions open and opening to women, and longing to enter upon fields of activity and enterprise for which they seem to themselves peculiarly fitted. A young woman who aspires to a place as a lawyer, a physician or a writer, and expects to attain it by her own unaided efforts, has a long and weary way to make before she can reach her goal. If she will only teach, or learn telegraphy or some other trade which requires comparatively short preparation, or is supposed to do so, and easily yields a living, it is all well enough. What is the use of bestowing elaborate training upon a young woman in art and science or literature or medicine or the law, when in a few years, more or less, she will in all probability marry and go to housekeeping? To reply literally, I also marries, her training in art will enable her to make her home beautiful, her training in science to make her home healthful, her training in literature to keep her from sinking into the mere domestic drudge, her training in medicine to rear her children with hygienic wisdom, her training in law to manage her affairs with discretion, and to be her own lawyer in case of her husband's death. Does not the success of a man depend as much on his wife as on himself? A man married but not mated cannot achieve the full, rounded, perfect success that is possible to a man whose wife is his companion and equal. Every talent, accomplishment, capability she possesses is so much capital for her in the marriage partnership, and many a woman is compelled to draw on this capital for resources during her husband's life and to depend upon it entirely in the event of his death.

If girls were trained to depend upon themselves for support, and were not socially compelled into ineligible marriages, the number of unhappy miscalled homes would be greatly diminished. If girls were permitted to choose their professions and occupations as boys are, and aided in doing so as many boys are, the ills of "old maids" would soon cease to be any more of a stigma than that of "old bachelor" is. And the number of purposeless, morbid, sickly, sour, selfish women would be vastly diminished.—Woman.

Mince-Pie and Destiny.

WITH the appearance of the oyster the mincepie ecstres itself out of the vasty sleep, and its old familiar name again decorates the menus of our restaurants. Justice never has been done to this dish, and this is probably why it wreaks itself upon the human race. It is a triumph of eclecticism, a cosmopolitan dainty which has chosen its substances from the four quarters of the globe, and which is graced with a respectable richness, an oily, sleek fatness redolent of high living, dyspepsia and gout. Everybody makes fun of the mince-pie, even those who eat it most readily, and it is currently believed that all possible jokes about its make-up were exhausted before the war, but nearly everybody eats it. Some apparently happy in the possession of copper-bottomed stomachs thrive upon the pie; others are simply jade and sickled slaves of a habit as hard to break off as the use of opium. When a man or boy gets the custom fastened upon him he is gone. No one knows the amount of mince-meat daily assimilated into the St. Louis system, but an idea of the quantity can be gained from the fact that it is invariably the first article exhausted on the bill of fare in every restaurant where it is sold. The waiter will inform you sadly that the mince-pie is all out in nine cases out of ten when you are late for dinner. Nobody ever heard of the apple-pie being exhausted, or the sago pudding. This fatal mania for mince-pie has a queer history, and is working out a singular destiny. In two or three centuries it will have utterly changed the American character and person; it will alter our civilization, weaken our morals and diminish the calves of our legs. It is even now our National dish, as poker is our National game and politics our National business. And it need surprise no one if our harmonic equivalent for the roast beef of Old England fifty years from now will be the mince-meat of Old America. We are gradually coming to this, and there is no use in dodging the issue.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

If the census could be taken of those men in large cities who are most prosperous in business it would be found that a large proportion of them look forward to a home upon a farm as a resting place after the toil of years. There is a feeling of security in owning a farm, which is not enjoyed by those engaged in traffic, and therefore farm life is growing more popular with men city-born and bred.

The Latest Snake Story.

Saint Patrick, or some appropriate representative of that beneficent saint, is greatly needed just now near Kingston, Ont. They have snakes there eleven feet long and as thick as a man's wrist who chase people about the fields and throttle them, and who are altogether very objectionable denizens of the fields and groves.

However diverting to the snakes their practice should at once be forbidden. Mrs. Rachel Dederick is feelingly of this opinion. She is the wife of Mr. Frederick Dederick, a wagonmaker of Cairo, in Greene County, N. Y. A few days ago she was passing through a patch of blackberry bushes. She was fatigued a the pull and was gathering some berries for tea. This proceeding was considered lutrusive by a certain snake who dwelt hard by, and he made clear his view of the case without delay.

It appears that this particular representative of the evil one was in the habit of whistling as he approached want of thought, but rather as an indication of the depth and virulence of his mental processes—and this Mrs. Dederick was she sauntered along heard his dulcet strain amid the blackberry bushes. She paused, looked, and hesitated. While Mrs. Dederick was hesitating this particular foe of mankind communicated a puncture, not an ample area this time, but a blackberry bush. At this moment all the artful snake's whistling "Comin' through the Rye," or some other equally seductive ditty, and, on, ling sight of him, with a shriek that may easily be imagined, Mrs. Dederick set out rapidly for home.

Mrs. Dederick was very fast, but the faster she ran the faster ran the snake. Presently, and while there was yet a great deal of the blackberry patch to get over, the reptile caught her fair prey by her ankle, and, in spite of her strenuous remonstrance, reinforced non afterward by a shower of stones from her tin pot, the snake continued to wind himself up very symmetrically on Mrs. Dederick's person until he got to her neck. By this time, it is not surprising to know, the poor woman had ceased to run. In fact, she had sat down upon the ground. And thus she was found in an unmated agreement with the snake when Mr. Dederick arrived upon the scene and introduced a diversion.

This consisted in Mrs. Dederick being laid flat upon the earth by her husband and by that gentleman then executing a war dance on the serpent's head with his boot heels. The process was unattended by any whistling, and was directly followed by Mrs. Dederick's happy release. A blue mark surrounded her throat where the monster had coiled his final effort, and at the moment of her rescue she fainted; but those were the sole damages suffered by the lady in question. She tells the tale with racy vivacity to whomsoever will hear it.

Such a substance is the story told by our enterprising contemporary the Times this morning on the faith of an esteemed correspondent up Kingston. It proves that even in our own happy land women are not exempt from the tribulations of our common mother; and Mr. Dederick's neat performance on the snake's head shows that prophecy, even at this remote period, continues to be verified in the most impressive manner. When Mr. Barnum receives the skin of this audacious descendant of the Tempter of Eve—which covering is, of course, some two fathoms long—and it is appropriately mounted and verified by suitable affidavits, our esteemed contemporary's latest snake story will receive, no doubt, the almiring credence which its merits so richly deserve.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Fathers on the Bench and Sons at the Bar.

THE London Law Times says: "An incident in the British County Court case is a question which we think is of the utmost moment to the bench and the bar. A son of the Judge appeared as counsel before him and the counsel on the other side declined to go on with the case, as we gather, on that ground alone. We think the Judge was wrong in suggesting that this step could in any sense be an insult to him." The London Law Journal says on the same incident: "In the United States the impression has taken so deep a hold that an attorney has actually been unable to pronounce a father disqualified, on the ground of interest, to try a case in which his son is engaged. Such views of the situation are, it is needless to say, altogether without foundation. Judges' sons cannot be ostracized from the bar because their fathers were eminent lawyers before them. We do not for a moment believe that a single case on record has been decided in favor of a particular party because that party happened to be represented by the Judge's son." But both journals agree in the conclusion that the constant practice would be improper. The Law says: "To say that a barrister should never appear in a court presided over by his father may be unreasonable, but we must emphatically condemn the practice of barristers adopting a court in which to practise over which their fathers do preside or may preside alone." And the Journal says: "This appearance is not of sufficient importance to be taken into account in ordinary cases; but still, if a son attach himself constantly to the court of his father as a Queen's counsel in equity attaches himself to a Vice-Chancellor, it must be admitted that an impropriety is committed."

The difficulty in the case is four-fold; first, that a Judge will always be presumed by the populace to lean in favor of his son; second, that the son will get business from the force of this presumption; third, that the Judge will unconsciously be biased in his favor; and fourth, that the Judge will do his son's client injustice from the fear of such bias. Answer pure, the Judge and the son will always stand in danger.—Albany Law Journal.

A Remarkable Expedition.

THE Berlin papers state that early in October in the present year an ordinary sailing-boat, well known on the River Spree, will start from the Jannowitz bridge for New York. The route will be along the Spree, past Havel and the Elbe to Hamburg, thence to Liverpool, and from Liverpool across the Atlantic, while the boat will return through the West Indian archipelago to Lisbon, and thence direct to Hamburg, the Elbe, Havel and Spree. Four months have been determined upon by the sanguine adventurers as a sufficient period for the entire voyage, which is for the first time to connect as sister ports the great cities of Berlin and New York. The first thought of the undertaking was due to a conversation at dinner of the Berlin Sailing Club, on the successful ocean voyage of two Englishmen or Americans in a boat of sixteen feet in length. A Berlin banker, a leading member of the club ventured the opinion that a German would dare to undertake such a voyage. The manager of a great place of entertainment in Berlin, who was formerly the captain of a German transatlantic steamer, proffounded a wager that he would find German sailors and sportsmen who would not shrink from the attempt to journey all the way from Berlin to America in a little Spree sailing boat. The wager was accepted by the banker, and the project took its first practical shape. The boat is 25 metres long, 3½ metres broad, and 2 metres deep. Everything will be done to render the boat inside as much as possible like a cabin. Sleeping berths, a small cooking stove, and a table will be provided, and there will be room for provisions for a crew of four men for four months. The boat will be provided with sails, but will be towed by steamers as much as possible. The crew will consist of the captain, a mate, and two sailors, who will be selected from among a number of volunteers. The boat will be provided with a flag bearing the inscription, "Berlin-New York." The expedition will be accompanied by a correspondent of the Berlin Tageblatt, who will send home accounts of the voyage. The boat will be provided with a number of copies of the Tageblatt for distribution among the ships met with during the voyage. Remarkable Presence of Mind.

A LAMPLIGHTER in Leeds, England, while making his rounds, at half-past four in the morning, noticed flames bursting from a bookseller's house. He gave the alarm, but the firemen arrived too late to save the house, two stories of which were already blazing. The bookseller and his wife, who slept on the third floor, appeared at the windows in their night-dresses and called upon the firemen to rescue them. The husband ran down the stairs leading from the bed-room to the second floor to ascertain if it were possible to escape that way. On reaching the street, but he found that the stairs leading from the second floor were on fire, and he was so severely burned. Hastening back to his wife, and closing the bed-room door to prevent the dense volume of smoke which now began to roll up stairs from suffocating them, he tied a number of sheets and blankets together, and, fastening one end round his wife, lowered her from the window into the street beneath. When she was still some distance from the ground he was compelled to let her drop, but she was caught by the firemen and escaped uninjured. He then leaped on the coping of the shop, and thence into a blanket held out to receive him by those below. At this time the fire was raging fiercely in the small shop and the room above, and a few minutes after the inmates had been saved the flames burst through the shutters. Few men in so great an emergency would have shown such presence of mind.

THE title of Chancellor of the Exchequer, borne by the British Minister of Finance, has been in use since the time of Henry I. That monarch formed the clerks of the Royal Chapel into a body of Secretaries or Ministers, to conduct the affairs of the Kingdom. Their head was called the Chancellor, and when they regulated the finances of the country they sat around a table marked into squares, like a checker board, on which the accounts were rendered.

The Spirit of Improvement.

Every neglect of the farm, every missed opportunity for improvement, every neglected fence, or half-injured field, and every other feature of false labor that is contrary to the spirit of improvement now so dominant in the agricultural world, is covered over with the mantle of charity, i. e., the "want of time."

If time is of any value, and the cost of those improvements were put into the balance against it, it would be found in a majority of cases that the greater number of these actually-desirable improvements would cost but very little, if any, more than this time which is counted so valuable. The primary cost of these improvements can never be exactly ascertained until they are put in operation and their value determined by use and comparison with old methods that they have superseded; and when their superiority is demonstrated, the precious time that first stood in the way of their introduction will be found to have been either largely wasted in getting along with old-time tools or methods, or largely over-estimated.

If the spirit of improvement is to become a factor in farm labor, it is a valuable feature to study out and know in advance exactly what is needed—what line of labor is necessary to put in practice the particular improvement that it desired. When it is determined upon, do not allow any side issue to supplant the idea, and finish it up and perfect it before leaving it or applying it to some other plan that has come in to dispute occupancy.

If this spirit of improvement is once begun, it will enlarge as its farmer sees new results and finds that farming is an exact science rather than an empirical business of doubtful result. If disaster comes from this spirit it will be the result of over-reaching and attempting too much rather than a lack of realizing upon any thorough and well-worked plan, and it is from this rather than the former, that the farmer must guard himself. The adoption and perfecting of one plan or method at a time is a safe way, and the amount of improvement and adornment that will follow as one year is compared with another will be a surprise, and the additional labor with the increased income derived therefrom, without asking for more hours of labor, or greater exertions to perform it will be the complete answer for participation in the spirit of progress.

This spirit has an effect upon the family for good. The improvement of house, barns, machinery, lands, and general beautifying and lending additional attractions, will inspire a refined taste in the family that will not be contained within that circle, but will extend and show its influence over wider areas and other localities, and the pride once put in operation would be controlled by judgment, and directed in a systematic manner, from which the prospect this desirable quality so essential to a higher farm life, and good and profitable returns in the shape of intelligence and unrestricted outlays, against which no farm revenue can contend, but it also has the power to bring the happiness and inspire the intelligence that stamps the farmer as a true "nobleman of the soil."—Ex. Exchange.

Something About Poultry Breeding.

POULTRY has its place upon the farm, in the village yard, and in the hands of the farmer; but the fowl for the breeder or fancier are not generally the kinds for the farmer, and those for the small quarters of the village lot are not the varieties for the wider range of the farm. And from the great interest in poultry-breeding during the past dozen years have come many advantages which the farmer and villager may claim and turn to useful account. For instances: patient, careful breeding of many years' trial has been necessary to produce in so great excellence the many different breeds of poultry which we now have, adapted to different purposes; and these results could not have been reached otherwise than through a careful love for the business, as manifested by those whom we term "fanciers," "in lovers of a particular variety" and no breed, however undesirable for general purposes, like the Dunkans; but has its "fanciers," and these fanciers, producing with care different breeds, having distinctive characteristics, have been of great service, because farmers, villagers, and all who keep hens, or love fresh eggs, or roast chickens in August, are reaping the results and advantages of their patient labors. The "long-head" for all purposes has been obtained through this careful breeding and selecting the best mothers; the best layers—those yielding the greatest number of eggs in a given time, or the best table fowls; and how could these have been produced had no one shown more interest in hens than the common farmer, who is not particular about the number of accretions in the comb, or the spangalings of the neck hackle? There has, undoubtedly, been much folly exhibited by many breeders devoted to a class, but generally it may be said that poultive benefit has come to our poultry interests through their efforts.—New England Farmer.

A BOSTON inquiry thought it to turn the abundance of the apple crop to account for the poor people of that city. Bags are sent to farmers who will contribute, and the railroads give transportation free.

PORTLAND (Me.) Sheriffs recently poured sixty-nine barrels and twenty half-barrels of contraband beer into the sewer, besides considerable rum, whisky and other strong liquors.

ROMAX.—Lady readers who have not tested the magic properties of borax have been losing a great help and comfort. If once used, you will never be without a bottle on your toilet-table. It removes stains and dirt from the hands better than soap, and at the same time softens and smoothes the skin. It is splendid for washing the hair, and will, without injury, cleanse brushes and combs in a few moments. For washing purposes it saves both soap and labor. It will extract the dirt from articles of delicate texture without rubbing. It being only necessary to put the articles to soak with a solution of borax over night, and most only to be rinsed in the morning. Two tablespoonfuls of pulverized borax dissolved in a quart of water, to which water enough is added to cover a pair of blankets, will cleanse them beautifully. It also saves great labor in washing paint. It is said to drive away ants and roaches, if sprinkled on the shelves of safes and pantries.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

[Jackson Patriot.]
A Reminiscence of 1874.
In 1874, Dr. Jacob Meyer, Saint Louis, Mich., gave the following opinion: The Hamburg Drops appear to be recommended. I have prescribed them for irregularities of the liver, disorders of the stomach and diseases originating from these disturbances, and have observed the most satisfactory results. The Drops also cure constipation in a short time.

At this time of the year, says the New York Times, that very precious herb tarragon can be obtained in the market, and the snake tarragon vinegar for home use is exceedingly easy. Take a bunch of tarragon, which can be had for twenty-five cents a bunch, pull the leaves and put each half of it in a quart bottle of wine vinegar; let it remain there for about five weeks, then you have an excellent tarragon vinegar, quite as good as can be bought in the shops. This is for use in making salads, and adds much to the flavor thereof.

"And the Leaves Were for the Healing of the Nations."
This is fully exemplified in the demonstration that no common a panacea would as exactly meet the wants of humanity as the curative properties which when combined with essence of Jamaica Ginger and other efficacious vegetable extracts, is to be found in Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed. It constitutes a most potent remedy for bowel complaints, Cholera, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Sea, etc. It is one of the most efficacious medicines for colds, and to break up fevers and inflammatory attacks, and for the alleviation of pain. Every family should keep a supply of it. 50 cents by druggists.

A Happy Christmas.
Rev. E. P. Hall, Ingram, Indiana, Pa., says: "I have been a great sufferer from Kidney disease, and after trying many remedies, found one that could not get well. I commenced the use of Hunt's Remedy, and before I had taken one bottle I knew I was getting better. I have used three bottles, and am entirely well. I recommend the use of this remedy to all suffering from Kidney disease, as I believe it will cure them. I have also used it in my family for Dyspepsia, and it has done them much good. I feel that I can truly say that I have a happy Christmas."

Deserve a Monument.
The Standard Scientific N. Y., in the journal from which the following is extracted is true: That the proprietors of Wisener's Safe Remedy are entitled to a monument for the good it has done is certainly beyond question. The fact that a million dozen bottles are sold annually upon its merits is sufficient evidence.

A Warning.

"I am a Democrat."—Jefferson Davis.
"I am a Republican."—U. S. Grant.

Words enough could not describe the situation better.

WHEN the Democrats get throttle working $379 on the ruplowers of Republicans they should try their hand at $6,000,000,000, the amount their treasun, rebellion and general cussedness have cost the United States.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Wheeling (West Va.) Intelligencer says that in the Republican torch light procession in that city on Tuesday night last were six voters out of one family who have hitherto voted the Democratic ticket, each and all of whom will vote for Garfield and Arthur at the coming election.

Go away from home for news. The London Court Journal, speaking of President Hayes' expected visit to England next year, remarks: "Mr. Hayes, who is a Wesleyan, is occasionally in the habit of delivering lay sermons, and he may possibly preach during his visit to this country."

GEN. VAN VLIET is assistant quartermaster general of the army, and lives at Washington, on Fifteenth street, with Senator Hamne on one side and General Sherman on the other. When General Grant was a "spike" at West Point, General Van Vliet was first captain of the corps of cadets. General Grant has often said since that at the time he was uncertain in his own mind as to who was the greater man, Napoleon or Van Vliet.

THE Sun of to-day closes its week's work by remarking: "Every word he (General Hancock) has written since the campaign began has struck the nail on the head, and struck it so hard as to drive it home." This is true; but what sort of nails has he been driving? Was that a promising nail for the country's welfare which he drove home in his congratulatory dispatch to the Greenbacker Plaisted, of Maine? If the financial question is of any importance in the present canvass any prudent business man will say that in this dispatch General Hancock drove a nail whose proper "home" is in his political coffin.—N. Y. Evening Post (ind.).

"THE south was solid for Jeff. Davis in 1860; she will be solid for Hancock in 1880," said Joe. Blackburn, of Kentucky, at Batavia, Ohio, on the 20th of September, 1880. Just so; and the north was solid against Jeff. Davis in 1860, and should be solid against Hancock in 1880. If those who were solid for Jeff. Davis support Hancock as their man, those who were solid against Jeff. Davis should support Garfield as their man. Or put it in another way: "The south was solid for Jeff. Davis in 1860, and will be solid for Hancock in 1880;" but the north was solid for Abraham Lincoln in 1860, and should be solid for Garfield in 1880.

WHEN Gen. Butler carried the north in Cincinnati, October 6, 1863, he said: "This country has been in turmoil and difficulty and commotion long enough from traitors and their sympathizers. Let us settle this question at once and forever. It shall be God, let us serve him. If the Lord God be God, let us serve him." Some of the Republican papers are unfeeling enough to twist these words down his throat in these latter days.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, through one of its correspondents, referring to the appointment of national supervisors of election in Indiana, says:

If the policy of flooding the State with supervisors and deputy marshals is pursued, there is an almost absolute certainty that the 12th of October will be dictated by bloody riots. The Democrats are desperately in earnest this year.

To this complexion has it come at last. No effort can be made to secure a pure and free election without threats of "bloody riots" by Democrats who are "desperately in earnest."

The Cincinnati Enquirer is authority for the most discreditable utterance of the campaign. It quotes one Rev. Isaac W. Eaton of Kansas, a member of the Democratic national committee, thus: "A man of his (Gen. Garfield's) profession is obnoxious to the present generation. I mean to say that he is a Baptist-Campbellite preacher, one of a denomination that hold back on the petty dogma of no salvation without baptism." As a specimen of intolerance, bigotry and narrowness, these words have not been equaled in the present year. What a man of a large and influential Christian body do or do not think of the office of baptism is only startling when offered as a reason for the defeat of a candidate.

GENERAL HANCOCK thinks Union soldiers would continue to be pensioned, and all would be peace and everything lovely. The Meridian Mercury of Mississippi, says in view of Hancock's election:

We would not expect the successful party to risk to the light of engagements of supplying wooden legs to the one legged Confederate soldier, but we would expect a man claiming to be a statesman to rise above the stupidity and meanness of compelling the one legged Confederate soldier to pay for the wooden leg the government furnishes the Federal soldier when both are owing and paying allegiance to the same government. In this connection we think to make a remark also, Southern Congressmen who vote for these pension laws and appropriations. They stultify themselves every time they do it, and degrade themselves besides.

Who Shall They Choose?

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Out of about sixteen millions of persons over ten years of age engaged in all sorts of occupations in the United States, not more than two millions, probably, are in independent circumstances, while a vast majority are compelled to labor, in one way or another, for their daily bread.

This is a nation of toilers, of men whose lot has been cast in the dingy workshop, on the dusty labor field; but it is a nation of thinkers as well, of those who realize that here in the Western world rests the only government under the sun actually belonging to and regulated by the people, and that they must be responsible for its preservation or destruction according as the end shall be.

It is amazing when the character and principles of the two candidates and the parties now before the country are considered, that there should be any doubt as to the choice of the nation of workers. Here, Garfield is of the people and for the people, and represents in a remarkable degree the possible height to which every humble boy in the land may rise. He knows the desires, the wants, and the aspirations of the humble lad whose lot has been cast in hard places, and who turns to those who have overcome great obstacles and vanquished foes with hope inspired and resolution strengthened. He knows what the life struggle means, what a combat with poverty signifies, what home is worth, and what triumph runs. He can sympathize with those who toil, as well as rejoice with those who succeed, for the line between success and failure is many times so narrow as to count for little as a sign of ability or incompetency. Having had these experiences, having passed through poverty, the road that leads from unknown poverty to unrecognized position, General Garfield can understand the necessities of the great people whose destinies he will probably be called to rule over for the next four years. Whatever the worship and aristocratic may do, whatever their preferences and their interests may lead them, the great mass of people who make up the noiseless of our population should turn to General Garfield as a member of their own household, as one of their own family, an older brother whom they believe to be wise, and who thinks of his past struggles and their present efforts with that unbroken respect which dignifies and ennobles the true American citizen.

It is my personal opinion in General Hancock to say that he is the opposite of all this. The education, profession, and natural habits of most make him the antithesis, and alienate him from the heart of "common humanity." When he entered the humble soldiers in the army, they looked with indignation and remembered it in bitterness against him; but he only exhibited the natural impulse of a nature which looks upon subservience to position as inferiors by fate, and which regards fearful of the world as totally unfit to be assumed on terms of equality with the remaining one-fifth. It was this same idea that prevailed when a divinity was thought to hedge a king and it may still do for lands guided by the scepter of a monarch but it is out of place here.

In his nature, in his education, even in his personal habits and dress, General Hancock is as far removed as the poles from the millions of people who make up our voting population. It is said that the brother of Louis XV. had breeches of a fabulous kind. "For tall hackers," says Mercier, "held him up in the air so he might deep into them without vestige of wrinkle, and from which vigorous movement the same fear, with more effect, delivered him at night." This man even in the days of feudalism luxury that marked the reign of the French monarch, was laughed at as one unfit for the severe duties of state-craft; but if we are to credit the statement of his own party friends, Hancock is addicted to extravagant articles in the way of dress before which even the breeches of the French exquisite becomes an article of homely apparel. This amounts to nothing, however, except as it shows how radically foreign to all the severe plainness of our people is the man selected by the Democratic party to govern them.

If we want a man at the helm who, in all that animates and inspires the masses, is at their antipodes, then General Hancock is a fitting man to chose; if we want a representative man, a man who knows the people he would serve, who believes that God's providence does not extend to the few, but the many, then let the country take one fashioned in the mold of republican simplicity, moulded into manhood by the friction of a life's struggles, and felt of the salutary memories that make men charitable, and more thoughtful of their fellow men.

A Fatal Landslip.

IN the northern part of Bengal is a cool and sequestered resort called Naina Tal. It is perched up among the hills and has long been a special refuge during the stifling heat of the Hindostan summer for Englishmen of both the civil and military service. Many such residents have been wont to fly with their families on the approach of the parching weather of the extreme season and to find an asylum in the more moderate Naina Tal. A considerable mountain stream passes the spot on its course toward the plains, and a beautiful lake tempers the atmosphere hard by.

At Naina Tal some of the most romantic episodes of Indian life have had their beginning and their end, and more than one novelist has chosen the place as a scene for picturesque incident and description. Such are some of the associations of Naina Tal's past; but that its history will be studded for many a page to come in the future is scarcely probable. The village, as we just learn by telegraph, has been absolutely overwhelmed; and it is more likely, if fears now expressed are confirmed, that Naina Tal will be unique in that respect for the of the earth.

The fate that has come upon this remote Bengal settlement, while a rare one, is by no means without precedent. A memorable example has been set in the Swiss country, and the name of Franconia suggests its sad particulars. There is some likeness between the two places. Franconia, in the White Hills of one or two mountains Naina Tal was surrounded by them. It might be described as lying in a super manner, and was likewise from the topographical position to sudden inundation.

It was on Sunday, July 26, that the torrent of water that Naina Tal was destroyed. But the full measure of the disaster was not known at once. It appears that rain began falling heavily there, as we read the dispatches, on last Friday morning, and that it continued to do so record in prodigious torrents until Saturday afternoon. The average for those days of the rainfall of twenty-five inches in forty hours. The neighboring lake swelled to a threatening height. The river rose to a flood in the ravine. Soon after twelve o'clock "there was a sudden and appalling crash, followed by vast floods of dust, and the whole place shook. That cost rose in a moment far above its usual height and swept in a massive wave toward the river, when an enormous mass of land came down, burying the hotel and the band of musicians, overwhelming that scene of gayety and festivity. It had also taken alarm in season and fled. Later on, when the storm was in maximum danger, a party was organized to save them; and those were the "rescuers" who, with the remaining guests, were also smothered in the awful landslip. Some thirty souls, and an unknown number of visitors and natives, perished among the victims; and by the last advices the flood had not subsided but was devastating the whole surrounding country.

The most terrible feature about this disaster has apparently been the experience of those in parts of Italian Switzerland, in the high valleys of the Bregno, or at spots like the site of Bricl, in Valais, where avalanches of snow have already occurred. It may be said that a danger so fatal is always lurking, and people there want they have to look for. An avalanche may be long or short. It may be of the first magnitude, or one of comparatively little importance. Sometimes it comes in the night, and then who encounter it do so at disadvantage choice and peril. Where, however, an open hill-side seems secure, the danger is coming is more awful, in the degree that it is unexpected. For, and this is the most terribly impressive feature for flight or for any other use of protection.

In the case of Naina Tal the fatal mischief has obviously at the first thought been imputed to a cascading mountain; but it may be suspected that the tremendous rush of earth that buried the village was partly of a volcanic origin like the sudden earthquakes which during the current year have been experienced at so many points of the globe in both the western and eastern hemispheres.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A Marriage Ceremony Performed by Telegraph.

WARDEN Franklin first drew the electricity from the clouds and Morse first used it to transmit language; it is doubtful if either, in his wildest flights of the imagination, ever conceived that it would be used to perform a marriage ceremony. But electricity has been put to a great many more uses than its original devotees never even vaguely dreamed of, and among them the accomplishment of the performance of the marriage rite.

Within the last two days several marriages have been performed by telegraph, one of which occurred yesterday. The parties were Albert H. Latham, agent and telegraph operator, at Albany, Mo., and Miss Sarah J. Farris, of Portland, Ind., the ceremony being performed by Rev. B. J. Parrett, of Portland. Mr. Latham was at Albany and Miss Farris and the officiating minister were at Portland. The marriage took place after the following manner, the ceremony being performed through the agency of the American Union Lines, the operators here, who were acquaintances of Mr. Latham, being notified of the event and requested to be on hand at the time. Messages when they arrived at the general office:

At 1:45 o'clock the operator at Albany telegraphed to the operator at Portland, asking if the party had arrived. There being no American Union office at Portland, the dispatch had to be transferred at Indianapolis, and reached Portland on the Western Union. This necessitated some delay, but in due time the response came:

"We are here. Ready in a few minutes.

"J. J. Dorsey, operator at Portland."

The next message was as follows:

"PORTLAND, 2:45 p. m.

"Albert H. Latham, Albany, Mo.: Do you take Sarah J. Farris to be your lawful and wedded wife, to live together until you do die [keeping grammar to do]? "H. J. DARRETT."

The response was:

"ALBANY, 2:55 p. m.

"Yes, sir, I do.

Then came the following:

"PORTLAND, 3:06 p. m.

"Albert H. Latham, Albany, Mo.: By the authority vested in me I pronounce you husband and wife.

"H. J. DARRETT, Minister."

Congratulations then passed over the wires from various points, wishing the newly-married couple happiness and prosperity. A dispatch was also sent by the bride telling her husband to meet her at Kansas City.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

THE steamboiler in the large fruit-drying establishment of Charles LOose & Son, at Xenia, exploded with such terrific force, a few days since, as to utterly demolish all the buildings, killing three persons and seriously wounding about twenty others. The explosion is attributed to the carelessness of the engineer, who paid the penalty of his act with his life. Portions of the building were thrown a hundred rest into the air, while a large piece was thrown nearly across the river Raisin. Some sixty feet distant all kinds of valuable carriages contained in it were completely destroyed. The loss to Loose & Son will exceed $5,000, besides the interruption of a very profitable season's business.

THE other evening a fireman named Bert Conners, on the run of the G. R. & I. Railroad, was stricken with a fit of insanity while he was on his engine. A few miles above Kalkaska, coming south, he stripped himself of his coat and vest and threw them into the tender, and while with about $40, and a loaded pistol followed after, and, finally, a silver knife, and he threw them into the fire-box. A watch, worth about $40, and a loaded pistol followed after, and, finally, a small bible, after having placed fifty cents carefully between the leaves, suffered the same fate. The engineer was finally able to subdue him, the train was stopped, and he was taken back into the caboose and taken care of till the train arrived at Kalkaska, when he was taken to jail for safe keeping.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

In the calm blue light of a summer sea
A boat were sailing by,
And a youthful and a maiden correctly
Skated its beautiful white wings by.

They gazed as only the young can gaze,
With longing, and joy, and hope,
And the white sail, half as a smile, showed
The legend of "Sapolio's soap."

In the sweet still night, another sail
Came fast and over head,
And the words, bright, that it bore aloft
Was "Hostetter's Famous Bitters."

And farther off, but hurrying on Through years no sail could bring,
Came a sail with the sweet suggestion in
The Unrivaled Baking Powder."

"How sweet," said the maid, "it is to sit
At Nature's feet, and adore her,
But this and no value the virtues of The Thunder Hair Restorer."

"Yes," said the youth, and he dropped a tear,
Such joys can never forget,
I have to confess, in the greatness way,
Of Pearline's cheapness."

IN A BLACKBOARD.

MILDRED PARMENTER sat in the little parlor window, looking dreamily out on the striped rag carpet. The August sun peered into the windows, and at the sides of the pretty paper curtains, perforated with pointed and fanciful work in the breeze, she caught occasional glimpses of the passers-by. Mildred was quite altogether one of the most delightful of men."

"Is it her fault?" whispered Harley as he nudged Bobby, but Maggie hustled them both out of the room without ceremony, hurrying after them herself, and before the teacher recalled them the question appeared to have been satisfactorily answered.

SUMMER'S GONE.

THERE'S a purple tint on the woodland leaves,
And the winds are up all day;
There's a rustling heard in the yellow sheaves,
And it seems to sadly say:
"Sweet summer's gone away!"

In the wrinkled brook no roses peep;
And the bees no longer stray;
And the butterflies have gone to sleep;
And the locust trills all day,
"Sweet summer's gone away!"

On the lowering fields the spider spins
Where the lambs no longer play;
And the cricket's low his chirp begins
And the quail is whistling say,
"Sweet summer's gone away!"

There are loving arms for baby dear,
Through the skies are cold and gray,
And a cozy home not all the year,
And sweet kisses every day.
Though summer's gone away.

MAY'S LETTER TO HER MOTHER.

My Darling Mamma.

PAPA says I may write and tell you that we are all well and you must enjoy yourself and not worry about us for we are getting along splendidly.

That's just what he told me to write, and he has directed an envelope all ready for me to put the letter in. But I don't see what he means by saying we are all well, for there's a lot of things the matter with us. There's measles, and mumps, and malaria, and if there were any more diseases that I've begun with 'M,' I guess we would have them, too.

Grandma—she's got the malaria; that's the prettiest-name, and I think it's the prettiest-looking sickness. It makes her face yellow, but it don't hurt her out like mumps. Edith and me think it makes her cross. Do grown folks get cross when they are sick just like children? She takes Quooneen to break up chills, she says, but I am afraid she will break up herself, for she slakes as if she would fly to pieces some days. I think she's got all the bushes there is in the house for none of the rest of us have had any, but there was measles enough to go round, and we all had our turn, I guess. I suppose I should have had some of them, too, but grandma says I had 'em nine years ago when I was only a year old.

Billy, the boy that carries newspapers, brought us the mumps, and we aint much obliged to him. I asked him what he wore his face in worsted comfortable for, and he said 'cause he'd got a corn behind his ears, and then he asked me if I saw anything green, but of course I couldn't through his big comforable. Anyhow, I don't believe it was green corn in the middle of winter. Hannah said, the next to-morrow, when she saw him, that 'twas mumps, an' he had no business to come here, and said, "You'll catch it, Miss, for talking to that naughty boy in the hall when you was told not to!" I did catch it, too, and I wish I hadn't talked to him, for my mumps are awful, but they are most better now. Once I thought they'd left me, and I thought I had torn off both ears and turned the nose wrong side out, it hurt so; but I hadn't.

How English and American Women Follow the Dictates of Paris.

WHEN Paris starts a fashion, the milliners of all civilized countries are ready to inspect it all over Europe and America. But on us English we do not think French inventions sit with much grace. We are too different from the French to adapt with any success the style which best suits them. The English character and mind being, as compared with the French, simple, vague and slow; imaginative rather than fanciful; constant and stable in feeling rather than quickly sympathetic; proud, rather vain, and, though proud, decidedly more modest and less self-confident than the French, we invert when we do exert ourselves, and push out our creative faculties on entirely different lines, so to speak, from those on which the French invent; but too often our modesty, vagueness, simplicity, slowness acting together, ensnare us into an undue admiration of a French quality or achievement, for the very reason that we do not possess the one and cannot readily accomplish the other. French vanity, on the contrary, as a rule admires French qualities and French achievements because they are French. We are apt to surrender our National taste, and because the taste we adopt is superior, but because the weak side of our simplicity is drained into believing theoretically in the taste which thinks so much of itself. That we are not discriminating in the manner in which we follow French fashions is shown by the fact that we do not copy what is really admirable in their work, and that we exaggerate almost to distortion the most fantastic inventions in French dress. Many a fair milliner will keep an entire form of the fashions for her English and American customers, and we in England often imitate the frills and furbelows of French trimmings, but we do not make a point of imitating the neatness and perfection of the work, nor are we clever in fitting the wearing of the garment appropriately to the occasion, as that often we see an idea which starts from the Paris milliner in the form of an elaborate and artful piece of needlework swept about thin London streets in a slovenly, untidy form. Probably our power of perfecting the details of dress will always fall as long as we imitate another Nation's inventions for the same reason that in higher kinds of art it is so rare to find a copyist of any work of art capable of rendering even the most technical qualities of finish with real skill of elaboration, the interest felt in the painting himself being the only power sufficiently strong to inspire the patience and ability necessary for perfect completeness in the detail. But we believe that were we to sharpen our inventive qualities and overcome the vagueness which results in an indiscriminate following of fashions which in no way fit into our National characteristics, weaving into such inventions a better side of our modesty and simplicity than we now show in doing more than justice to another Nation's taste, we might achieve the invention of costumes at once beautiful and English in character.—London Spectator.

Like Produces Like.

MANY years ago, and in a period of our agricultural history when new varieties of any farm crop were extremely rare, an observant farmer of Pennsylvania, acting on the principle that perfect grain could only be insured by using perfect seed, originated a superior variety of wheat, which he named "barrel wheat." This he did by holding the sheaves of wheat in his hands by the butts and beating the tops over a barrel. The large, plump, perfect grains would fly out, and none others. The wheat was used as seed, and the same practice to procure seed being followed a few years produced what seemed to be a new variety of wheat, but what was only the result of a practical application of the natural law of selecting the fittest. This anecdote is a practical illustration of rising none but the very best for seed. Unripe, small potatoes are unfit for seed; neither are overgrown, hollow tubers. The former are weak and imperfect, the latter, like all abnormal monsters, unhealthy.—Kansas Farmer.

Thunder Storms in South Africa.

NATAL is an awful country for thunder and lightning, writes a correspondent of Land and Water, and never a summer passes without some damages, being done to both man and beast. No house is considered quite safe without a conductor. Macintosh is rather noted for its thunder-storms, and although I have seen one or perhaps two instances of the dull blue gums of the our that had been seared from head to foot by the lightning, yet, when it is considered how numerous they are, how frequently these thunder-storms occur, and how awfully near the lightning approaches, it was astonishing how few of them had been struck. From this fact I should say the eucalyptus tree offers peculiar attraction to the electric fluid; though from the cases mentioned, where the trees had been scorched but not shivered, they would seem to have acted as conductors.

While on the subject of thunder and lightning, I may mention two instances of the freaks sometimes indulged in by the latter. One happened on board a ship on a voyage to Australia, when one of the boys standing near the foot of the mainmast or the main rigging, I forget which, was knocked down by the fluid. He remained in a stupefied state for some little time, but recovered. The lightning had made a bald patch on the crown of his head, and torn the iron heels off his boots. It was several years after the accident that I made the acquaintance of the boy, and the bald patch still remained on the crown of his head. He was considered rather a stupid boy, but whether this was natural or the effect of the lightning seemed doubtful.

The other freak happened in Natal. Mr. W——, a settler on Mooi River, was riding across a high range (Mount Wess), when he was overtaken by a thunder-storm; he recollected nothing more. He was found wandering about in rather a stupid state, and could not well account for his being on foot, or what had become of his horse. On search being made in the direction he was likely to have followed from the farm, his horse was found on a spur of the range, dead, and his saddle shattered to pieces.

The Kaffirs believe that where lightning has struck once it will strike again, and if a hut or kraal has been hit they vacate the spot immediately and build elsewhere.

A New Attraction.

THE day is coming when some sharp-sighted man will discover that the summer season is not the season when families must desire to leave home for rest and recreation, and then public attention will be called to the following:

"WINTER RESORT HOTEL.—The undersigned takes pleasure in informing the public that he has opened a hotel on the North Pole for the reception of guests during the coldest part of winter. Dense fog saves gas and fuel in the cabins, and overcoats and rugs are here unknown, and doctor's bills. No snow to shovel off the sidewalks here. No frozen waterpipes—no plumbers. Chilblains are unknown, and frostbites never heard of.

For attractions he will advertise icebergs from three to seven feet long, entirely natural in design and constructed on purely philosophical principles. There will be a hill and hand-sleds. There will be a pond so constructed that boys can be drowned through the new ice with neatness and dispatch. Skates will be furnished free of charge, and prizes offered for the new beginner who scores twelve bumps the quickest. No charges made for damages to the ice. There will be a supply of hot bricks in every hall for use of guests with cold feet. Jugs of hot water furnished free on application to the office. Frozen poultry, toast on ice and iced milk will be among the table attractions. Snowballing will be the chief youth amusements, and boys will be on hand to teach the kind-hearted woman how to make fine shots. The evenings will be passed in debates, spelling schools, playing checkers, drinking cider and cracking hickory nuts. Charges moderate. A thermometer in every room. Greatest clearance ever offered for lying about the weather. Mere snow thus can be furnished by any rival house. Come and be convinced.—Detroit Free Press.

ALL SORTS.

IT is something fine to be good; but it is far finer to be good for something.

THE drum-major is a very useful man. He attracts people's attention so they don't notice the awful faces made by the cornet-players.—Boston Post.

SALVINI, the Italian tragedian, has for many years taken lessons in English in order to be able to interpret Shakespeare in the original text, but he says he despairs of ever playing in English on the stage.

A SPECIMEN, five-foot serpent has been captured in the Straits of Delaro, near the island of Vancouver. It is about six feet in length, with a head like a reptiler, a mane and pointed tail. The animal has been photographed. Its body will be preserved in spirits and sent to the Canadian capital.

THE death is announced, at the age of eighty-eight, of the Countess Louise von Wrangel, born a Von Ballow, widow of the deceased Field-Marshal of the same name, who preceded her to the grave about three years ago. The lady celebrated her golden wedding in 1850 and her diamond one in 1870—a very rare achievement even among the robust and long-lived gentry of Prussia. In the Countess von Wrangel the poor, the sick and the afflicted of Berlin had one of their most constant friends.

ALTHOUGH illness is frequently fatal to persons of great mental or physical energy, some workmen still find their term of existence very short on account of the deadly nature of their employment. The average life of a Sheffield fork-grinder is only 30 years, but that of a dry-grinder of steel is 38 years. For every 70,451 tons of coal dug up in Prussia the life of one miner is sacrificed; and in England there is one life lost for every 90,419 tons raised to the surface.

THE parish priest of Montanaro, a village in Upper Italy, was very much in need of an altar for his church, but could not induce the male members of his flock to contribute to that end. He then resolved to experiment upon the softer natures of his female parishioners. Accordingly the pulpit after high mass, one Sunday morning, he concluded an eloquent sermon by exhorting the women present to devote their hair to the sacred purpose he had so frequently and unsuccessfully recommended in the attention of their natural protectors. So saying, he professed from the bosom of his cassock a pair of large sharp scissors, and retired to his sacristy, impressively summoning matrons and maidens alike to follow him thither. No fewer than two hundred and twelve submitted their locks to his pastoral shears, and when the sacrifice had been fully accomplished the female population of Montanaro found itself as short of hair as a well-worn blacking brush.

Edison's Story of the Electric Light.

THE editor of the North American Review has induced Mr. Edison to "tell his own tale in his own melodious way," and the result is an interesting article over his signature, which appears in the October number of that periodical.

Mr. Edison begins his article with a few words to those who have expressed their impatience at the delays in the perfecting of the electric light. The delays which have occurred to defer its general introduction are chargeable, he says, not to any defects since discovered in the original theory of the system in its practical workings, but to the enormous mass of details which have to be mastered before the system can go into operation on a large scale and on a commercial basis as a rival of the existing system of lighting by gas. Important improvements have been brought about by these delays in the direction of economy and simplification, and almost every point in the system, as well as in the details of manufacturing the apparatus.

The lamp, the inventor tells us, has been completely transformed. To quote his words:

"The perfect lamp consists of an oval bulb of glass about two inches in height, pulled at one end, and with a short stem, three-quarters of an inch in diameter at the other. Two wires of platinum are led into the bulb through the stem, supporting the loop or U-shaped thread of carbon, which is about two inches in length. The carbon is hermetically sealed after the introduction of the carbon loop. At its pointed end the bulb contains a little piece of platinum foil through which the air in the bulb is exhausted by means of a mercury pump till not over one-millionth part remains. The tube is then closed. The entire quantities of the two platinum wires so connected with the wire of an electric circuit, and at the ends of the lamps is a screw by which the circuit is made or broken at pleasure. When the circuit is made the resistance offered to the passage of the electric current by carbon causes the loop to acquire a high temperature, and as the bulb is exhausted, but as this takes place in a vacuum, the carbon is not consumed. The 'life' of a carbon loop, though it is not a current is passed continuously varies from seven hundred and fifty to nine hundred hours. With an interrupted current the loop has an equal duration of life, and as the average time an artificial light is used is five hours per day, it follows that one lamp will last about six months. Each lamp costs about fifty cents, and the cost of another may be easily substituted for it."

Another important modification of the system, introduced since the last authorized account of the light was published, is the substitution of dynamo-machines for magneto-machines in the stations from which the electricity is to be supplied to the several districts of the city—a change in the direction of simplicity and economy. To the question which is so often asked, when will a public demonstration of the working of the system be made, the inventor replies that "that such a demonstration will in all probability be made at Menlo Park within two or three months from this date." The time which has elapsed since the preliminary demonstration of last January has been by no means a season of inaction for the promoters of this enterprise. There is a vast gulf between the most successful laboratory experiment possible and the accomplishment of the results of that experiment in a commercial sense. A prodigious amount of work was necessitated by the establishment of factories for producing the lamps, the generators and other essential parts of the system in large quantities, so as to be able to supply the first demand."

Mr. Edison goes into the particulars concerning his lamp, giving a statement of its advantages over gas in the matter of simplicity in the management and economy. He repeats what has already been stated in the Herald concerning the plans for lighting the cities. Estimates are being made of the exact cost of "plant" in the different cities; contracts are being negotiated for the manufacture on a large scale of engines, dynamos, lamps, wire and all the other supplies needed for the practical introduction of the system throughout the country.—New York Herald.

The Sister.

PERHAPS there is no possession in life like that of a sister—a sort of a second self, to whom one may say one's say, confident that it will be as secure as if unsaid; from whom one may hear homely truths, with the certainty that they are not dictated by petty spite or jealousy; from whom one may receive compliments, assured that they are the sincere expression of opinion, and not the thoughtless adulation of those who expect to be repaid in the same coin with interest. A person destitute of sisters is almost as much alone in the world as the Wandering Jew; for father and mother may be numbered in their kind, but they are not her contemporaries, so to speak—not of her generation; she has not played and toyed with them. They may adopt a cousin or a friend to fill the vacant niche, but no friendship or cousinly feeling is simple enough. Our friends and cousins are apt to talk to us over with each other; they are not always dealing out to us little faults; our short-comings are not placed out by any skill of theirs; we are at the mercy of their moods and tenses, and our idiosyncrasies are at the mercy of their sense of humor; but a sister is a bulwark between us and "the arrows of outrageous fortune." She makes our troubles her own; whatever hurts us wounds her; she abets and encourages us; extenuates our faults, publishes our virtues. In every family of sisters there is one brighter than the rest, who gilds the ignorances and lack of brilliancy of the others; no prettier than the rest, for whose sake the others receive attention; one stronger than the rest, upon whom they lean, and thus they bolster and shield each other. The saturine girl never tastes the flavor of sisterly talks "after the ball," or over the work-table, in which her self-criticism she has few to sit her, and often presents the appearance of dejectedness for lack of a little genuine advice. A sister desires nothing so much as that one should look one's best; a friend, alas! is sometimes better pleased when one appears at one's worst. Moreover, sisters are rarely jealous; praise of one reflects upon the other; blame of one is only a backhanded insult to the other; since they hold everything in common, and fine does not care to be flattered at the expense of Lily. The bounty would like to share her loveliness with the plainest; does not enjoy shining, unless her sister strikes sparks, whom it is no pleasure to rival in any respect. To be sure there is the exceptional sister who is more like a changeling than anything else, who betrays soulliness, outrages love, demands the lion's share of everything but work, and skirts care; but she is more rare, thank Heaven, than a four-leaved clover, and we are more likely to find her in novels than in real life.—Harper's Bazar.

A Great Excitement.

MAYOR there is never any excitement at the West End, but you can't make the people realize it. A colored gentleman was shown the other day by the colored gentleman, who was shown ten feet ahead of the animal, pulled vigorously on the bell rope. He had got his whole strength on it, when the great gas-bag came down and started forward as nobody that the colored gentleman didn't have time to recover his balance and went down, and as the bag trampled on and kept cussing, he was dragged along, clawing wildly, until his head collided with a lamp post and he brought the procession to a halt. On regaining his feet the colored gentleman was very angry and ran for the great gas-bag, and the great gas-bag started off at a rapid pace down the street. About five rods ahead a great crowd observed a gas-bag coming over to look down an open coal hole, and on reaching him the goat contrived to hit him and the effect disappeared down the coal hole like a shot, just as the colored man stumbled over the goat and fell, and the goat took a bolt. A number of people had gathered about, and then the goat took a notion to turn and go the other way, and he got the rope so entangled in passing a tree that seven were upset and finally nearly everybody was down. The man down the coal-hole then attempted to climb out, and got his head and shoulders above ground when the goat made another rush at him, and he had to dodge down again. And then the goat assaulted a woman who went up a lamp-post, and then the goat went for another man, and, as the owner had little power to his foot, he was yanked off that lamp-post quicker than powder. Fortunately for him, his belt broke, and he sprang to his feet and took off toward Harvard College, yelling fire, and the goat suddenly jumped into an open window, seized a woman into a fainting fit, and upset a table on which stood a dish of hot water. He got most of the water upon himself and, made more frantic by pain, jumped out of the window again, butted a bull-dog and the generators and other essential parts of the system in large quantities, so as to be able to supply the first demand."

THE TWO MEN.

The great objection that was urged against Hancock at the outset—that he is a professional soldier and nothing else—still stands as one of the chief reasons why the American people should not be willing to entrust to him the administration of the civil government. A professional soldier—one who was educated into officers life and his views for a day long out of it—is very apt to be undemocratic in his dispositions and tyrannical in his methods.

General Hancock is utterly inexperienced in civil life—has never mingled with the people—knows nothing of finance or statesmanship—is naturally and by lifelong training and association arrogant, exacting and arbitrary—has nothing in common with the common people—and, if he were the Executive head of the Government, would of necessity be either a self-willed autocrat—a little despot in epaulets—or a mere tool in the hands of the leaders of the party which elected him, and would know what they are, and what use they would make of such an instrument of power.

When non-even reformed Democrats shall come seriously to consider the danger, or, at all events, the grave impolicy, of elevating this style of man to the Presidency of the Republic, we cannot but believe they will, as patriots and good citizens, shrink from taking so perilous a risk, especially when they know, as all candid and intelligent citizens by this time must know, that his competitor for that high office, James A. Garfield, is a practical, level-headed statesman of great experience, a man of culture, conscience, and undoubted patriotism, whose qualifications for the Presidency of a party of law and of free institutions are unquestionable.

As the time for the election approaches men who think more of the real interests of their country and the real honor of their Government than they do of mere party, will, we trust, give due weight to the fact that Hancock would, at the very best, be a hazardous experiment in the Presidential office, while Garfield's many years of active and honorable participation in the affairs of the Government and his recognized ability and success in practical work, especially any very strong protests both of his capacity and his trustworthiness to the command of that high office.

The publication of Rev. Dr. Foster's recent interview with Gen. Grant in which the latter expresses fear, Hancock's having had the Presidential ins in his bosom ever since 1861, and expresses his preached over a line which is strengthened at the war department of Louisiana and Texas in 1867, is the acquaintance of the period, thus Grant acknowledges that, in the exception of a few slight mistakes, Dr. Foster had reported him correctly. Gen. Horace Porter accuses Gen. Grant of "unbecoming silence" for having "been publicly expressed himself in reference to a brother Wing Pointer. We presume Gen. Grant feels that he owes quite as much to his country, which is now for a second time threatened with rebel capture, as he does to West Point sentimentality.

Texas is to be a reunion of survivors of Andersonville and other rebel prison pens, at Chicago on the 20th of this month—the second annual meeting of the association organized at Toledo one year ago. An interesting programme has been prepared, and those attending may be sure of a good time. Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and many other prominent Union officers have been invited to be present. The committee on arrangements would like to know, beforehand, how many are coming, and such of our readers as may attend the reunion, should send a postal card, announcing that fact, to Anson Dyer, chairman of the committee, at Chicago.

Hancock and the Democrats talk about a free ballot and a fair count, and rekindle the idea of their being either terrorism or fraud in any of the Southern States. In 1876, Tallahatchie county, Mississippi, gave Hayes 1,006 and Tilden 1134. That county gave 969 Republican votes in 1875 only the year before; 891 in 1872, and 1,029 in 1868. In one year, 968 Republican votes were whiped out. Hundreds of other localities might be cited, where the official records show just such "wonderful changes" as Tallahatchie.

Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, and Marshall Field, of Chicago are the latest reported converts to the cause of Garfield and Arthur. They are two of the most active and influential business men in the west, and their conduct indicates the deep anxiety of the commercial classes in view of the possible consequences of a Democratic success.

MISS ALICE SHIRE, of Laurinburg, N. C., was betrothed to Lieut. John Easterly, a young clergyman of that place. A few days ago the latter determined to go to China on missionary work. Miss Shire refused to go with him, and tried to prevail on him not to go. He persisted in his determination, and Miss Shire took so much affected that she became a raving maniac.

A FIRE broke out in the Chase Mill, Lowell, Mass., on the 5th, completely destroying the structure. The walls of the mill on falling, struck the Faulkner Mill, cutting that on fire, also, and burning it to the ground. The loss on the Chase Mill is $200,000, and on the Faulkner Mill about $150,000. Over 400 persons are thrown out of employment by the fire.

IN the General Episcopal Convention in New York on the 7th a resolution was introduced instructing the Committee on Canons to investigate and report whether Right Rever. end Bishop A. McCoskry, of the Diocese of Michigan, had been deposed from the holy ministry and all the offices thereof, in confining to the use of the church.

TELEGRAMS of the 7th report that the epizootic was ranging among the horses at Milwaukee and Detroit, at the latter city several fatal cases had occurred.

FOR the year ended June 30, 1880, the issues of paper currency, national bank notes and postal-cards aggregated in value the sum of $93,087,861, being an increase of nine per cent. over that of the previous year.

FIVE yellow-fever patients, seamen from San Domingo, were admitted to the Quarantine Hospital at New York on the 8th.

AT a National Convention of Ship-owners at Boston on the 8th resolutions were adopted favoring the creation of a Department of Commerce, the Chief of such Department to be a Cabinet Officer, and in favor of applying the English system of measurement to American vessels. A resolution in favor of free ships and one favoring a repeal of the Navigation laws were defeated. A motion for the abolition of compulsory pilotage was adopted by a vote of 81 to 72.

TWO men named George Lowrie and David Thomas, of Nelson County, Virginia, recently assaulted and robbed a widow named Marsie, of that place. They were arrested and placed in the County Jail, from whence they were taken on the 8th by a band of armed men and lynched.

JOSIAH MERRIMON and wife were riding home from La Crosse, Wis., on the 8th, when a spark from the former's pipe set fire to the straw in the wagon-box, and both were fatally burned.

WILLIE WALKER, a nine-year-old son of James Walker, a prominent farmer of Lancaster County, Neb., was found, the other evening, in a hog pasture, with an empty pistol under him. He had been shot and his body almost beyond recognition. He had only been missing since morning, and was believed to have committed suicide, failing since he lay.

A SMOKE being built over the river at Chippewa Falls, Wis., fell on the 8th, and six men were precipitated into the river. One of them, William Gates, was killed.

YOUNG JACKSON, who recently shot and killed the Ute Chief Johnson, has benefriend dead at the stake, having been burned by the Indians. When last seen alive he was in the custody of three white men, one of them a Government agent, who were taking him to Gunnison City. OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Evening Stars in October.

THREE brilliant planets shine in the October evening sky. Jupiter heads the list, for he passed his perihelion, or nearest point to the sun, on the 25th of September, and reached his opposition, or nearest point to the earth, on the 7th of October. He is now forty-six million miles nearer the sun, and one hundred and eighty million miles nearer the earth than when at the most distant point from each. Nearly twelve years must pass before so full again to it as favorable conditions for observation. Therefore every lover of the skies should watch the movements of this superb planet as he comes darting across the eastern horizon as soon as the daylight fades, mounting like a young moon and casting a perceptible shadow. He now reaches the meridian about midnight and sinks to the west as the sun rises in the east, being visible throughout the night. He is so near that his masses may be seen in an opera-glass, and his telescope appearance is beautiful beyond expression. The ruddy spot with marks like cross-belts covering his surface, and his belts are painted in radiant bands of orange, pink and blue-white, far outshine terrestrial hues. This planet now rises about six o'clock, but at the end of the month and the middle of the night.

Saturn is next in interest, following closely in the footsteps of Jupiter, a few degrees to the northwest of his rival, and rising a half hour later. He is traveling slowly toward perihelion, which he will reach early in 1881, but as his perihelia occur at intervals of about twenty-nine years, he comes into opposition once or twice of his brightest phase during a lifetime. Saturn reaches his opposition on the 19th of October, and is then at his nearest point to the earth, being in a line with the sun and earth, with the earth in the center. He is not nearly so brilliant as Jupiter, but the observer will fail to recognize him, or note his retrogression, for his course is now direct, and his disk is not a soft, pale yellow. This, as well as his increased size, is more favor ble, as the opposition, by which he is brought so prominently widespread presentation of his rings. These rings, scientifically worth of Russia, will be seen coming up in the east about half-past six, at the end of October, at half-past four. One other planet divides the opposite honors with Jupiter and Saturn. This is Venus, and very brilliant observers may now pick her up shortly after sunset in the glowing west. She has passed her superior conjunction with the sun, and is now approaching us. She sets about three-quarters of an hour after the sun; in the evening of the 31st she will linger six to the horizon for about an hour and a quarter after the sun has disappeared. But while now her apparent motion will be on the wane, she will increase in brilliancy, and presently her stay in the west. Before November closes, she will eclipse them in the brilliance of her shining, reigning during the winter months as the most splendid of the planets, and the acknowledged queen of the shining host that stud the sky.—Youth's Companion.

The Time for Sleep.

MOST Americans sleep too little, and almost all Americans fail to sleep to the best advantage. It is curious how reluctantly we take God's best gifts. The Gospel is not the only one which men put away from them. At night God puts the light out and calls upon every thing and every one to go to sleep. Nature accepts the invitation; the flowers, the trees, the birds go to their sleep soon after sunset, but we are all like children, and we fight against sleep till it overpowers us and carries us off despite ourselves. "He giveth His beloved sleep," but we do not know that we are His beloved, nor that sleep is His gift, and we rarely appreciate it till some overmastering anxiety drives the nursing sleep from our home, and then we become her exile and try to charm her back again. In the morning tools was tries to awaken us, as a mother behind, by the gentlest of kisses—for what kiss is so genial as that of the sunbeam? and the flowers, and bees and birds awaken to beauty and song; but we shut the tender mother out, and refuse the gift of resurrection life which the morning brings, and cling at sunrise to the sleep which we so stoutly repelled in the early darkness. Twice every day God says to us, "Rest and life are my gifts;" and twice every day we push them from us till we can no longer resist them. The two sweetest and most delicious hours of the day ought to be those of falling asleep and the hour of awakening; and we make them both hours of discomfort, even from our childhood. For there are two things that nearly all people are reluctant to do—go to bed at night, and get up in the morning.

No one person can lay down rules for another's sleep any more than he can for another's eating; for every nature is a law unto itself; but there are some general principles of almost universal application. We put them here tersely for easier recollection.

Night is the time for sleep; daylight is the time for activity.

A healthy person is his own best alarm clock. Do not waken your children. If they sleep too late in the morning it is because they do not go to bed early enough at night.

The early night hours are the best sleeping hours; the early morning hours are the best working hours.

The best remedy for sleeplessness is a tired body (not too tired) and a trustful mind. Sleepless children are rare, for their bodies are ceaselessly at work and their minds do not worry.

Different natures need different measures of sleep. Humboldt is said to have lived on four hours of sleep. But eight hours is a fair average; and he who borrows from his sleep for his work borrows at a frightful rate of interest, and of a nature who will prove to be a veritable shylock.—Christian Union.

The Teeth of the Ancient Greeks.

ONE of the most remarkable features of the discovery of the band of Thebans who fell at Chæronea is that, according to the report, all the teeth of each member of the Sacred Band are sound and complete. Either these gallant patriots were exceptionally lucky, or the condition of teeth in old Greece was enviably different from that of later and more degenerate days. The Romans were well acquainted with the evils that attend on the possession of teeth, and had a considerable practical knowledge of the use of gold in counteracting these evils. If we remember rightly, an exception to the rule of not burying precious objects with departed Romans was made in favor of the gold that had been used for stopping teeth. We moderns may compare favorably with the Romans in the skill of our dentists, but we cannot pretend to rival the defenders of Thebes in their superiority to the necessity for these gentlemen. Rare indeed are the happy mortals of to-day who can truly boast that their teeth are in the perfect condition that nature intended, and that the craft of the dentist has never been employed upon them. It would be a difficult task to select from our army, or any modern army, three hundred men with teeth as sound as those of the Theban warriors are reported to be.—London News.

Adre's Prophetic Poem.

DURING the years 1779 and 1780 Andre was on duty in New York and took a leading part in the social life of that city. He accompanied Sir Henry Clinton at the capture of Stony Point, June 1, 1779, and wrote an aid-de-camp upon the glacis of Fort Lafayette the theme of exploitation conceded to the garrison. He kept a careful diary and frequently wrote squibs in prose and verse for the loyalist papers, and in August, 1780, composed at Elizabethtown a burlesque poem entitled "The Cow Chase," in three cantos, amounting to seventy quatrains. The subject was the attack made by General Wayne upon a block-house near Hull's Ferry, two or three miles below Fort Lee, in order to drive in some cattle from Bergen Neck. By a singular coincidence the last canto of this poem was printed in Rivington's Gazette, September 23, 1780, the day of the poet's capture at Tarrytown. The last stanza is as follows:

> And now I've closed my epic strain,
> I trender as I know it,
> Lest (to some warrior drowsy, Wayne,
> Should ever catch the poet.

It happened, singularly enough, that General Wayne was the commander of the post at Tappan at the time of Andre's execution. The original of the "Cow Chase," in Andre's autograph, is still preserved, and underneath the above quoted lines an American pen has added the coarse commentary:

> When the epic strain was sung,
> The poet by the neck was hung.

THE CARELESS BOY AND HIS ARK.

THERE was a wee boy, just as bright as a lark;
He had many toys, and among them an ark,
White lions, and leopards, and tigers, and bears,
And all sorts of animals gathered in pairs.

Two camels in green and a pink kangaroo,
Two elephants black, a rhinoceros blue;
A keeper to drive them all in when it rained;
I can't tell you half what this boy's ark contained.

This wee boy was careless. How many boys are!
Although his two eyes were as bright as a star;
His clothes neglected, to look up his toys,
When one day his ark was done with its noises and its joys.

So, just how it happened I never could tell,
But one Sunday evening this boy heard a yell,
A clatter of hoofs and a low-muttered growl,
Then something not quite on a terrible howl!

For out of the ark all the animals strayed—
A sight to make most little people afraid.
They shouldered up the bookposts and walked over the bed.

Where he, this wee boy, in pow'rful dread,

The monkeys, they squeezed his sleeve, pearly gray,
And chattered and danced, with grimaces and leers;
The elephants trod on his breast and with dires—
While a shock sang duets with a gay kangaroo.

And all the night long that procession went by,
Till gold and red flooded the beautiful sky;
Then, startling people from out of his bed,
That horrid herd passed an unhappy head.

And there stood the ark; but its whitewash gone
Showed the ugly ark creatures had fed on, not on the floor.
"It might be a dream," said the boy; "but it's plain
It never will do to be careless again!"

"ANNA'S FONDLIN'."

"I THINK I'll leave her asleep here—it is so cool and pleasant, and I'll have her if she cries. She's sure to sleep two hours, she always does—dear little rosebud! There never was a baby like her!" So baby's carriage was left on the front piazza with baby lying fast asleep in it.

Young Mrs. Hall stood a moment at the door before going to her room, and congratulated herself at being nearly settled, for they had just moved to the village. "I will rest for fifteen minutes, and then dress for jaunt, and come down to her—for sit by baby till she wakes."

Two hours later the young mother woke with a start from the sound sleep into which she had fallen. "My baby!" was her first thought, "but she must be asleep, or I would have heard her." Not a moment was lost, for though she would not acknowledge it to herself, Mrs. Hall was very nervous. Down she ran, saying, to reassure herself, "What a nervous little woman I am! One would think this was my first baby instead of my third." As she stepped out on the piazza it felt empty and deserted, and—where was the carriage?

She ran around to the kitchen—Bridget had heard her darling and taken her, carriage and all. "Give me the baby, Bridget," she called, "I'm ready for her."

"The baby, mum! Shure, I've niver heard a sound of her but wanst this afternoon! She was crying pretty hard, but my hands was in the dough, and I heard you whoop her on the front piazza, and then she was quite quiet."

Mrs. Hall sank down on the steps. "O, Bridget, it was not me! Baby is gone!"

"Oh, shure you're fooling, mum! Shure I'll take the baby?"

The poor mother could only burst into tears; then with a feeling that something must be done, she sent Bridget on one side and she went the other, to ask the neighbors if they had seen any one taking the baby off. But every one had been sitting with closed blinds or sleeping, and not one had heard or seen the darling. Poor little mother! It seemed impossible to meet her husband and the two boys, who were coming home that night after a long visit at grandmamma's.

How the time went by Mrs. Hall never knew, till John and the boys came and heard the dreadful tidings.

"Depend upon it, you'll get her back," said John, hoping no one would be so fiendish as to mention Charlie Ross just then. "If she were older it would be different, but she'll cry and raise a row, and they'll bring her back. I'll have posters all over the village before nine o'clock, and we'll find her before morning."

Up and down the street all were talking on the same subject. "Those new people, you know, the basement into the Kirby cottage. They've lost their baby."

"Why, shocking! How did it happen?"

"Well! Who ever thought," etc., etc.

The Halls might have lived for years in the village with hardly a friend, for it was noted as a place where strangers were treated in anything but a cordial manner, but her sorrow and agony drew out every one's tenderness and each tried to comfort and help find the little one. But—what comfort could one give?

"I would so much rather she had died," moaned the poor mother.

"Don't say that, Nellie," said her husband. "I can't feel quite desperate. She's such a cunning little morsel—somebody that was baby-hungry has kept her awhile; but we'll get her back, please God, safe and sound."

CHAPTER II.

"If only we had a baby—dolls ain't any good, they're such make-believes!" and Ella dragged her beloved Susy Ann by one arm through the dust as if she despised her.

"And we could wheel a baby in a carriage. Pshaw! there's plenty of babies that haven't any mothers. Ma might get one of 'em."

"But I don't believe she'd buy a carriage—you know she never can afford anything nowadays."

"I don't care! If I could find a baby that didn't belong to anybody, I'd take it home, and when mother once saw it she'd keep it."

On trudged the two little girls. They were going nowhere in particular. Anna, the oldest, loved to stroll off to the new and prettier part of the village, and as Ella was Anna's devoted follower, she went on unquestioningly. Suddenly both children stopped and listened. "It's a baby!" said Anna, enthusiastically.

"It is, sure's anything! And the poor little thing's crying! Let's find it."

Following the sound, the children turned down a side street, and then saw that the noise and cries proceeded from a pretty little baby carriage on the piazza of the second house.

"Poor little thing! Let's go and speak to her," said Ella. The baby, at sight of the two little stubnoses, stopped crying and smiled, stretching out her hands.

"Oh, the dear little thing! Let's wheel her a little." Back and forth the children rolled her, and baby, soothed by the motion, dropped into another doze.

"Ella," said Anna, "I mean to take this baby home!"

"Oh, Anna! 'Tain't yours!"

Anna had some uneasy questionings of her own, but she stilled them. "I don't care! The folks here don't want her, or they wouldn't leave her crying out on the stoop. She's a 'fondlin'; I do believe!"

Ella had never heard of foundlings, but Anna's tone carried conviction with it. Anything we can just give her a little rifle and bring her back. You see if anybody cared, they wouldn't let us do this. You just lift the front wheels, and I'll get hold on the sidewalk. There. Ain't she just lovely? And what a pretty carriage!"

"If they don't want the baby, anyhow they wouldn't give us the carriage."

"I tell you we're only going to show her to mother, so hold your tongue!"

Ah, Anna's voice was not often as sharp as that, and somehow though they had the baby and the beautiful carriage, the children were not half as happy as they expected. It was a long walk home, for they lived at the very other end of the village, and by the time they had reached the little cottage baby was awake and beginning to feel hungry, giving impatient little cries, and looking at them into the dusky brown eyes that looked out of the white sunbonnets. Instead of the bright blue ones she longed to see. Even their perplexities mamma was out when they arrived home, and when they lifted baby out of her carriage she cried aloud from fright and hunger.

"Oh, dear! I reckon it only comes-sighed Ella, while Anna began to wish she had not been so very sure the baby was a foundling—her clothes did not look as if she were neglected!

In the midst of baby's loudest screams Mrs. Reed came home, and heard with consternation of what her little girls had done. The first thing was to make the poor little stranger comfortable, and that took time. By-and-by, after she had swallowed a cup of arrow-root, baby sat up and cooed and laughed. In spite of her anxiety on the mother's account, Mrs. Reed and the little girls enjoyed a few moments of the sweet baby talk, but soon the mother remembering what agony that other mother must be suffering, said:

"Now, Anna, you and Ella must go straight to the house you took the baby from, and tell them where she is. I will keep her quiet till you come back. Make haste now, for the mother must be nearly dead with fright. Are you sure you know the house?"

"Oh yes, mother! It was a gray house with brown blinds and a low stoop—only two steps up—and the folks had been moving, for there was a big van."

"Well, well! Only hurry off. Go as fast as you can."

Off went the children, Ella half crying at leaving the baby, but Anna too well aware of the mischief she had done to care for anything half so much as to find the poor mother. "This is the quickest way," she said, and hurried on. Her very anxiety confused her, and after a long walk she could find no such house as she had described to her mother. At almost every corner one or the other would think they saw a gray house or a big box on the sidewalk, so large turned and twisted all they were fairly bewildered, and at last, after walking for nearly two hours, they reached home, and with sobs and cries told their mother they could not find the right house.

The baby was asleep again, and Mrs. Reed, without waiting to give the children their supper or eat herself, started out. She inquired of several people if they had heard of a lost baby, but they were at the very further end of the town, and the news had not reached them.

"The paper comes out to-morrow—I'll advertise," thought the widow, and then hurried to the office of the Democrat and Eagle.

As she entered a gentleman was coming out. "I'll pay double," he was saying, "to have the posters all over the village by nine o'clock. I promised my wife, who is half crazy."

"Oh, sir," cried Mrs. Reed, "is it her baby?"

"Yes, do you know anything?"

"I have it safe and sound."

"Thank God! Come home with me," and seizing Mrs. Reed's hand, Mr. Hall thrust her into a carriage, and ordered the coachman to drive full speed for house.

In another half hour Mrs. Hall was standing between the two penitent little girls, with her baby in her arms. Mr. Hall and Mrs. Reed would have punished Anna, but Mrs. Hall insisted that she was as much to blame for leaving her baby on the front stoop, and that it was punishment enough for the poor little girls to have their "fondlin'" taken from them.

The happy father and mother lay awake almost all night, too excited to sleep, and there in the darkness Mr. Hall told his wife that he was going to bring home a nurse for baby.

"Oh, John, if you'll only trust me again! I'm sure enough. I don't like a great Irish girl—you can't trust them."

"Oh, I don't mean an Irish girl, my dear," said John, with a queer smile which in the darkness his wife could not see.

CHAPTER III.

"I want a dog I can trust—that has been trained to watch a thing, and not let any one but its owner touch it."

"Eno's your hound! A better critter never was found. Watch that, Dash!" and the dog fancier, throwing a glove on the ground. "Now, sir, you try to pick that up."

Mr. Hall stooped, but a fierce, low growl, evidently with plenty of bite behind it, warned him off.

"Take care of that till I come back, Dash," and the two left the dog alone.

After a saunter through the building they came back to find Dash sitting motionless beside the glove.

"He is fond of children.

"Yes, sir; but most of all a baby. You see, he was brought up with a baby, sir. They were folks, but it most killed 'em to sell Dash, only I paid a good price for him, and they needed money badly."

"What do you ask?"

"Seventy-five dollars."

After a little bargaining Mr. Hall walked off, and that evening baby was shown her new nurse. Masuma and the boys were delighted, while poor Dash seemed to think his first baby had come back, and barked and whined for joy.

All through the hot summer baby took her naps on the shady piazza, but chose to her carriage lay her big black dog, and no stranger dare step near the sleeping infant. Two little girls, though, often came and played with the dog and baby, and Anna and Ella had many a happy afternoon with "Anna's fondlin'" at Mr. Hall called baby Belle.—Boys' Ledgyard, in Examiner and Chronicle.

Being on Time.

MEN like Mr. Spurgeon, of London, know what is the worth of being on time in filling every engagement, and he spoke here like a man in earnest. Mr. Spurgeon says:

"Punctuality is one of the minor moralities, but it is one which every young man should carefully cultivate. There are a great many gentlemen who are opposite vice the less excusable. It is as easy to be in time as it is to be late. Persons who are late form one acquire the habit. Let it be acquired by all means, and never lost again. The habit of punctuality will depend a world of comfort to others, and every Christian ought to consider this to be a very weighty argument. We have no right to cause worry and vexation to others, when a little thoughtfulness on our part would prevent it. If the engagement be for twelve o'clock, we have no authority to make it quarter past, and by so doing we shall promote nobody's happiness. The odd five minutes may create discomfort for ourselves throughout the entire day, and this perhaps may touch the staggard a little more keenly than any less selfish consideration. He who begins a little late in the morning will have to drive fast, will be constantly in a fever, and will scarcely overtake his business at night; whereas he who rises in the proper time can enjoy the luxury of pursuing his calling with regularity, ending his work in its season, and gaining a little portion of leisure. Late in the morning may mean pulling and blowing all day long, whereas an early hour will make the pace an easy one. This is worth a man's considering. Much evil comes of hurry, and hurry is the child of unpunctuality. The waste of other people's time ought to touch the late man's conscience.

"A gentleman, who was a member of a committee, rushed in fifteen minutes behind the appointed hour and nearly apologized, for to him the time appointed near enough, but a Quaker who happened also to be on the committee, and had been compelled to wait because a quorum could not be made up to proceed with the business, remarked to him

"'Friend thou hast wasted a full hour. It is not only thy quarter of an hour which thou hast lost, but the quarter of an hour of each of the other three; and hours are not so plentiful that we can afford to throw them away.'

"We once knew a brother whom we named Late Mr. S——, because he never came in time. A certain tart gentleman, who had been irritated by the brother's unpunctuality, said that the sooner that name was literally true, the better for the temper of those who had to wait for him.

"Many a man would much rather be fined than be kept waiting. If a man must injure me, let him rather plunder me of my cash than any of my time. To keep a busy man waiting is an act of robbery, and also an insult. It may not be so intended, but certainly if a man has proper respect for his friend, he will know the value of his time, and not cause him to waste it. There is a cool contempt in unpunctuality, for it so good as says: 'Let the fellow wait; who is he that I should keep my appointment with him.'"

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

BERRY, the Indian Agent of Del Norte, Col., was arrested on the 19th for complicity in the killing of young Jackson by Ute Indians. Warrants were also out for the arrest of Hoyt, Holmes and Cline, of the United States troops.

THE "Italian Deposit Company," a Boston concern which had been doing business with women only, and pretended to pay eight per cent. on deposits, was entirely closed up on the 14th. Suits had been commenced against Mrs. Emily R. Howe, Manager, and Miss J. H. Gould, Agent of the Company, and attachments placed on all the real and personal estate of the concern. Complaints are generally aggregated less than $3,000 and yet no attempt had been made to pay them and relieve the concern of the embarrassment of the Sheriff, who was in possession. The liabilities were supposed to be very large, and the assets, even though the real estate, which is shown in Mrs. Howe's name, can be held for these claims, will be merely nominal.

A number of farmers of Illinois and other Western States met at Farwell Hall in Chicago on the 24th to protest against railroad and other corporations, and to organize an association whose duty it will be to expose the alleged wrongs inflicted by railroad and other corporations on farmers. Resolutions were adopted favoring Government control of the railroads, and that Congress should enact laws to that end, as well as to protect the producer against extortion; that no person who has factored railroads in the past should receive the support of the members, or of farmers generally, for re-election, that only men in sympathy with the farmers and the selling interests of this country should be elected to the State Legislatures or to Congress. The action of the Farmers' and Grangers' Union in the past was indorsed, and union with them in all their aims and objects was pledged. A State Farmers' Alliance was then formed, and William J. Fowler, of New York, was elected President; L. S. Coffin, of Iowa, Vice-President, James W. Wilson, of Illinois, Secretary, and Mat Anderson, of Wisconsin, Treasurer.

OCCURRENCES OF INTEREST.

A Terrible Explosion in Chicago.

A MORNING accident occurred in Chicago on the evening of the 15th in the Borden City distillery of Simon Powell & Sons, situated in a triangular tract of land at the intersection of Twenty-second and Morgan streets and Canalport avenue. The following account of the disaster is condensed from the Tribune: At seven o'clock in the evening persons within a radius of two of the distillery were startled by a loud rumbling sound, followed by the roaring hiss of escaping steam, time might have differed from the noise that some large boiler had exploded. Those in the immediate vicinity at the time of the explosion saw a large tank thirteen inches in diameter, and sixty feet from ground upward. Even at ten cents per bushel—which is the average price of good apples—the crop paid about as well as most other crops do.

The salt production for Michigan, as reported by the State salt Inspector, for the month of September, was 230,579 barrels. The total amount for inspection for the year to October 1 was 2,190,836 barrels, against 1,916,300 barrels for the corresponding period of 1879. The estimated product for this year will reach 2,600,000 barrels. The largest single history of salt manufacture in the State. A large number of new blocks are being erected this season.

On the night of the 11th as the Chicago & West Michigan train was pulling out of Hesperia and attained a long curve, the engineer discovered a man lying across the track, face down. As the train was going at a high rate of speed when first seen, only a few rods, and down grade, it was impossible to stop in time to prevent his being run over. However, he applied the brakes and reversed the lever, and succeeded in partially checking the speed of the train, but not enough to prevent his being run over, and the train passed over his body. The train was stopped as soon as possible, and the man found to be living. He was terribly mangled and bruised, and his left leg was broken in two places. He was taken to Hesperia, where he died in a few hours. He was a stranger, and had been drinking.

A FARMERS' CONVENTION.

A Protest Against Railroad and Other Monopolies.

A CONVENTION of farmers, mainly up of representatives from 20 rural hundred Grangers and other organizations, was held in Chicago on the 14th of October. There were about three hundred delegates in attendance. Matt Anderson (Wisconsin) was chosen President; L. Prince (Mississippi), W. J. Fowler (New York), A. B. Heath (Kentucky), Milton Hargrave (Illinois), J. E. Cobley (Iowa), and J. J. Pass (Michigan), Vice-Presidents; Jonathon Periam, Secretaries.

Mr. Powers, of Illinois, read an essay on "Cheap and Rapid Transportation." He argued that the great drawback to the advancement of the producer was the high freight rates of railways. In order to have the people prosper, cheap transportation must be adopted by some means. The remedy was the construction by the Government of a railway to carry exclusively freight from the producing centers of the West to the seaboard.

The following resolutions and petitions were reported from committees and, after discussion, unanimously adopted:

This Convention, representing the industrial and shipping interests of the United States, hereby declares and affirms as incontrovertible facts that the railroad corporations of this country have created a railroad monopoly which is detrimental to the best interests of the people, and that the same is now being conducted by Theodore G. Kimmens, the foreman, and there were present besides himself the following, as near as could be ascertained in the ruins of the building: John or Andy Daly, Joseph Hurwitz and wife and Jacob Kakowka. Also the following, who were wounded and scalded: Henry Fox and wife, Mrs. Kakowka, Henry Van Felde. While the engineer was increasing the steam pressure in the "Corliss" to drive the machinery, the battery gave way, the cooker exploded. It was blown through the roof and upward, carrying with it the brick, stone and timber of the building. Large pieces of iron were also carried to a distance of from 200 to 300 feet. The main portion of it landed on the west side of Morgan street, about 175 feet west and a little to the north of its original location. A considerable portion, together with one end of it, was buried deep into the earth. The shaking, boiler, engine and cooking rooms were entirely demolished. The fire, of the explosion may readily be imagined when it is stated that a freight car, laden heavily with coal, which stood directly in front of the opening, was overturned on the track, and the timbers and framework of the car were shattered in pieces as if by lightning. The timbers and masonry of the demolished building, together with the large iron cleats, were shattered in pieces as if they were pipestems, and were thrown into tangled heaps. The engineer, beneath the roof work, of course, burned beneath the debris. The scene at the distillery after the explosion was a heartrending one. Daly's body was the last found, and was carried into the engine room. The body of Kakowka, it was next found, and was laid side by side with Daly. Both bodies were fearfully mangled and horribly scalded that the skin and portions of the flesh peeled off at the touch. A large crowd soon gathered among which were many women and children crying and bewailing the loss of husband, father or brother. Many of the women there who visited the scene, and when she saw the dead body of her husband she fainted and sank lifeless to the ground. It was with great difficulty that she was taken from the room to prevent her from throwing herself upon the mangled remains of her husband. Those who had come to mourn for might well be mistaken for those that were poor, but living men. Daly leaves a wife and three young children in destitute circumstances, and Kakowka a wife and five children. Both families live four children thousands of miles from their home and almost penniless.

Seven Hundred Lives for One.

The Chino Mail relates the following: "A tale of peculiar horror comes from the Sonora quarter. The military Mandarin for the Sonora department, the Tycoon, who will be remembered as the Mandarin who gave the order for the comparatively few men in the Los Lunas Sheet affair, has been distinguishing himself in the inimitable Chinese fashion. Some small object, who held the position of Tax Collector, had been murdered by the Apaches, and the Mandarin, horribly by his eternal and extensible squeezes, considered taking the law into their own hands to be the only way of getting rid of him. For this daring outrage against law and order Pung Tye-Jen undertook to inflict punishment upon the rebellious, and did so with a completeness we rarely ever equaled. He first secured the services of a gentleman in pedro or cover his retreat, the place where the inhabitants had done as we have all reading will remember, and the gang of a mauser-war. The place was then besieged, and the noble, a tiled accomplice included, in the village were supposed to have taken part in the uprising against such petty and bad counsel for their pains. The number of those destroyed by the avenging army of Pung Tye-Jen at variously estimated from 600 to 700 as above stated."

The Planet Mars.

MARS has of late been too far away to be of much account to star-gazers. But as interest in the open country on the 15th he is nearer, in conjunction with the sun. Two points in the revolution of the planet around the orbit of the earth may be impressed on the memory. These are conjunction and opposition, the starting points in following the planet's career. Stars and the four great planets that outshine mighty spheres beyond his bounds. At conjunction Mars and the sun are in the same celestial point, the sun being directly between Mars and the earth. At an hour at which they seem to be joined to the sun, rising and setting at the same time, and becoming invisible to the eye or glimmer in his beams. At opposition they are at their nearest point, the earth being between them and the sun. They then appear to be opposite the sun, rising at sunset and setting at sunrise, while the planet is crossing the meridian at midnight. Neither Jupiter and Saturn are in opposition, but Mars is nearly so. Jupiter is farther and farther receding each night, and Saturn is in the west, close to the sun and hidden in its rays. After conjunction Mars passes to the western side of the sun, and in a month or two becomes visible in the east as morning star, continuing this role and gradually increasing in size and bright ness until his opposition in December, 1881.

Observers have noticed the peculiar color of the planet than of any other object in the heavens except the moon. Mars is the earth in miniature. His day is a little longer, his inclination to the ecliptic little greater, and his year not quite twice as long as ours. Eagle-eyed astronomers have made wonderful discoveries on our brother planet. They find his surface diversified with land and water, near the red color of his dire to the unlikeness of certain ingredients in his soil, discern gases and vapors in his atmosphere, watch the floating clouds that make beautiful his sunsets and sunrises, gaze with awe upon the strange that sweep over his surface, and note the ice-bound circles around his poles as they increase in the cold of the Martian winter and melt partially away in the heat of the Martian summer.—Dodd's Companion, Cyclopedia.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Judge Emmons, of Detroit, objected so strongly to having his beautiful premises at Keene disturbed by the canals Southern that he succeeded in compelling the authorities of that road to swerve from an air line, and locate their track on the lands of the Lake Shore. The reverse curve thus made necessary has always been an eye-sore and source of annoyance to the company. A short time ago they opened negotiations with the present owners of the property, secured the land desired, built a new line, and have now commenced running trains over it.

JESSE BRADMAN, of Kalamazoo County, sold one thousand bushels of apples from four acres of ground. Even at ten cents per bushel—which is the average price of good apples—the crop paid about as well as most other crops do.

The salt production for Michigan, as reported by the State salt Inspector, for the month of September, was 230,579 barrels. The total amount for inspection for the year to October 1 was 2,190,836 barrels, against 1,916,300 barrels for the corresponding period of 1879. The estimated product for this year will reach 2,600,000 barrels. The largest single history of salt manufacture in the State. A large number of new blocks are being erected this season.

On the night of the 11th as the Chicago & West Michigan train was pulling out of Hesperia and attained a long curve, the engineer discovered a man lying across the track, face down. As the train was going at a high rate of speed when first seen, only a few rods, and down grade, it was impossible to stop in time to prevent his being run over. However, he applied the brakes and reversed the lever, and succeeded in partially checking the speed of the train, but not enough to prevent his being run over, and the train passed over his body. The train was stopped as soon as possible, and the man found to be living. He was terribly mangled and bruised, and his left leg was broken in two places. He was taken to Hesperia, where he died in a few hours. He was a stranger, and had been drinking.

The wife of James Pierce, of Stephenson, Menominee county, was delivered of three sons at the same time administered a dose to her child, aged one and a half years. The child died, but at last accounts it was thought the woman would recover.

At Grand Rapids the other morning while Martin Ashbrouse was shifting a car, while in the act of coupling the cars, as the Walter in Furniture Company's works, his right leg was pulled out of his body and thrown twenty feet, completely severing the limb from the body. And he was also thrown to the floor. Deceased was thirty-eight years old, leaves a wife and two children.

The Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee Railroad, Pere Marquette Railroad, was handing near Saginaw the other day, and in attempting to board a moving train, fell under the wheels. He caught the weapon by the muzzle, and as drawing it toward him, when the trigger caught, discharging the contents of the gun through his head, killing him instantly.

Lewis Dickman fell from the roof of the Everett House at Lansing the other morning and sustained fatal injuries.

"NAY, I'LL STAY WITH THE LAD."

IT was Easter Sunday, No. 6 they saw two boats, laden and soon passed together. One of the explorers knew the man, and knew that after the explosion he had been asked by one of the men afterwards promised to go along with him to another part of the workings, and the latter replied, "Nay, I'll stay with the lad." It was the lodge of the explorers that Dewe left that, with one of two others now, from the river down. They were lying peacefully, having made pillows of their jackets and blankets.—Lady News.

"Nay, I'll stay with the lad."

Boom in the deep, Rob's mum,
Hostled together, dying and dead,
Far from the day-world overhead,
Fast to fate, by a sudden fate,
With a burden of night prostrate:
Hidden away from the merciful sun.
The Lord He has willed it so;
Under fifties and fifties of feet
Of the dear old earth, with a stain
Dreadful together, and sore
Pain to the living, and memory watchful force—
Coming home to the mind—
All that ranged from the pain of old,
To the pain of the present day,
Out of the depth they testify,
And on the ear of the day
Sobber than that in the deep, black seam,
Where the lad and the father lay and—
Only, "Nay, I'll stay with the lad."

"Nay, I'll stay with the lad."
Down in the deep, black seam,
They found him lying, and strong, and sound,
In spite of the terror unspoken;
And they bade the lad come away,
In the light bright bosom of living men,
And over and over the lad said "Nay,"
And gladden in earth's beloved embrace,
But he stood as a man set free
To stay,
In the midst of the shattered fragments lying—
Lying as dead—but powerless to move
At the harp of men, or the voice of Love,
And still lay dead where the cold must die,
And let her nightmare pass him by:
He saw his duty and straight before
In the hour that tests for evermore,
And he put the coward thought behind,
With never a thought of self in mind;
And, to life or death, he stands run the treacherous
Stream,
He stayed with him in the deep, black seam,
And to prayer and warning one answer had,
A heart-sick "Nay, I'll stay with the lad."

"Nay, I'll stay with the lad."
Down in the deep, black seam,
Over again was the story told
Of Honor, as Nancy said;
And the tempter came,
And the tempter came, and the same cares might be Something unknown to you or me,
Rather than nay, I'll stay with the lad."
Again in the grip of the lurking foe,
Again in the clutch of the fire-damp,
Rather than leave him in his misery;
Again in the choke-damp, the choke-damp,
Found with him in the deep, black seam,
And to all inquiries, in its strong selfdom,
Ought for the answer, "Nay, I'll stay with the lad."
And whether his sin, and whate'er his sorrow,
I know the pardon he found to-morrow,
Well in his Maker straight and free,
And plucked up out of the misery
For his lay he lived, for his boy he died:
And the two were found dead side by side
Before the divine, eternal Throne
Had nothing to show but their love alone—
And there, peerless, in their strong power,
That the greatest of these is love.
Self be hushed, while in places high
The harp of fame peals out to the sky
Let others strive and let others bear
The sword or the pen,
But to the great be but free from the curse of Self,
To the great but gather the fruit of the earth,
To properly prize and to nobly use
And keep but the worldling's life alive
What he is to those that love the unselfish few!
That these rights are given to who will use!
While unselfish may gain, and only lose
Life's meed is told in the deep, black seam:
And angels' tidings in Bethlehem
And human—Nay, I'll stay with the lad."

HOW TOMMY WAS LOST.

"QUATHY lib deal, I gueth, for I thowed a shlick at her an' she didn't shlik a bit," lisped five-year-old Rob, pointing with his chubby hand toward a log where Quashy, a large white hen, lay sulk and stark. Rob, in his short trousers and striped waist, of which last only a very narrow strip was visible above his waistband, looked for all the world like a little old Dutchman. His stiff hair, too, hung straight down into his eyebrows in a perfectly natural "dang."

"Tommy killed her, that's sure," piped a voice from the hay-rick close by.

If Rob, in his sturdy shortness, looked like a "Mynheer," then Dick, with his long legs dangling from the end of the hay-rick, where he sat both whistling and whittling, might be a fair type of the Yankee.

"Oh, Tom, how bad you be," said Milly shook her almost four-year-old curls sadly over such extreme wicked-ness, and went on with her burr-basket making.

"What's Tom been a-doing now that's bad? You think I am always doing something," came half petulantly from dreamy-eyed Tom, lying at full length under the open lean-to, where he had been watching the glimmer of the sky through the leaves for the last half hour.

"I see Mr. Wirt—innocent some folks are," said Dick, who was nine, and two years Tom's senior, and whose advanced age made him think himself a privileged censor. "Quashy is dead, and it's plain enough who killed her. Wasn't you just tearing mad the other day when she scratched up your precious flower bed, and didn't you say she ought to be hung?"

Tom was fully aroused now, and sat upright with his gray eyes wide open.

"Me kill Quashy! You know I wouldn't do it. If I did say she ought to be hung, I didn't mean nothing—I was so sorry about the fl

Patterson, having spent six weeks visiting among their friends at Vernon, Dearborn, Owosso, and Jackson, and attending the Baptist State Convention, have returned home and will resume their work immediately, the first preaching appointment in the county being at the High school house in Wilson's day evening, and next Sunday at Charlevoix, Horton's Bay and Boyne. Should at the Baptist church in the morning "The State Convention, and Its Relation to the Churches."

Greeley's speeches were delivered in this village Tuesday evening last by Messrs. Nixon, of Pellston, and Hitchcock, assisted by Charles S. Hampton, of Little Traverse. They told all about the frauds, the Natural leaders, the appearance of the gout, the tyranny of the rich, and the last shape of things generally. Nixon especially proved himself to be as eminent as a male orator, and Hampton misrepresented everything and everybody outside of the Greenback Labor Party. Business is forgotten and matters comes with the same nature that he delights to feast and scrape. Subscription to Greeley's subscription for "the pioneer temperance's organ of Northern Michigan."

The result of the Tuesday election is a most sweeping victory for the Republicans. It shows that the loyal people of the North have had enough of rebel impudence, and have arisen in their might to strike a serpent which had almost wound its coils about our government.

It sounds the death knell of Democracy. It consigns to disgrace and infamy the party managers who have in their last desperate struggle for life, resorted to foul and criminal measures to make votes.

It resigns the solid South into the dust of humiliation.

It is the second Appomattox.

POLITICAL COMMENTS.

Local News.

A Campaign Incident.

A CRAZY-LOOKING HUCKSTER wagon, filled with the products of the farm and garden and drawn by a dilapidated horse, attracted considerable attention on Main street in Titusville yesterday. The occupant of the vehicle was a little old man in homespun, who rode with one foot on the outside of the wagon-box. Interest in the odd-looking turnout was greatly increased when the driver reined up in front of the Titusville World office, and raised a small sign-board in his wagon, upon which was scribbled in an uncouth hand:

HENRY PRUDUCE
AND POLITICAL ISSUES DISCUSSED
FOR SALE.

This legend soon attracted a large crowd, when the little old man stood up in his crazy wagon and made a formal announcement that he had for sale a nice lot of garden produce, such as pumpkins, turnips, cabbages, some chestnuts etc. "I also have," said he, "also hitted a faded bob-quilt from a keg, "a few gallons of hard cider which I think is the best ever brought to yer town."

"What about the political issues?" yelled a man from the curbstone.

"I'll come ter that by and by—jes' as soon as I sell some ov this truck outer the wagon so as ; kin have a place ter stand."

The crowd realized that they had at last struck something original in the way of a political orator, and it was plain that they meant to encourage him, even before he had made the suggestion regarding business.

The ouler was the first thing they tackled. As many nor as could gath ered around the wagon, and the stock was closed out in short order at five cents a cup.

"Drink hearty, gents;" the little old man would say; "this remin's me in the bard-older campaign av '49, when I tuk the stump for Old Tippecanoe; an, besides, it's made in ve fine fruit as ever growed on a tree."

"Say, how 'bout all about Maine!" yelled a temperance man whose thirst was for political information.

"Don't fret the cattle," was the old man's response.

One man bought all the chestnuts he had, in order, as he said, to reduce stock and get around to the political issues.

Pumpkins, squashes, parsnips, etc., were purchased rapidly, the old man remarking that the drudgery of farm life was d—sted to him, and he was only truly happy when on the stump discussing the great issues before the people.

Sampling under the seat with his foot he unearthed a gourd, and holding it up, said:

"Gents, this is the last shot in the locker, who is the lucky man?"

"Twenty-five or thirty mos. apparently, allowed he not-liked it. The man who succeeded bowled it down street with an oath, and said that what he wanted was a smoke.

The crowd was breathless with anxiety, or would have been had it not been yelling "speech" "speech"

"No occasion for a speech now, gents. Goods all sold without it. If ye'd hung the like I expected ye would. I'd haranguued ye till sundown. But ye keen right up like little men and brought me back peraty. That's the way I like ter do biz. Thanks, gents, thanks."

The party who had been the heaviest purchaser ran to take the horse by the bits, but that animal laid his ears back on his neck and showed his teeth in the most vicious fashion.

"I forgot ter tell ye," said the old man, quietly, "not ter go near Romeo, for he's liable ter swallow some one."

He then dropped down into his seat and drove off, remarking that when his went actively into politics, business in garden truck would be a darned sight duller than it appeared to be now.—Keystone World.

The Wild Hog of India.

THOSE who have formed their conception of pig exclusively upon the tame pig of the civilized ary have no adequate idea of the free wild pig of the Indian jungle. Like the North American Indian, the pig is debased by contact with civilization. He becomes cowardly, weak, dirty, and a prey to an inordinate thirst for drink. The distance between the tame Indian of Saratoga, who steals chickens and wallows drunk en in the gutter, and the fierce warrior of the Western plains is not greater than that which separates the despised pig of civilization from the wild and fearless quarry of the East Indian pig-sticker. The latter pig, whose spirit has never been broken with pig yokes, and whose moral nature has never been poisoned with swill, is one of the bravest inhabitants of the jungle, and has been known to attack and put to rout the majestic elephant and the ferocious tiger.

The full name of the East Indian pig is Sus indicus, though in one except a punctilious scientific person ever calls him by that. Among beginners in the art of pig-sticking he is sometimes inaccurately described as a wild boar or thought to be very often a wild sow; but pig-stickers of reputation uniformly call him a pig or a hog. Sus indicus often grows to the length of four feet and eight or ten inches, and reaches the height of three feet, or even forty inches, at the shoulder. When full grown his strength is enormous, and in speed he will sometimes rival the fastest Arabian horse. He enjoys easy existence in a striped state; subsequently he becomes brown; when in the prime of life, he affects a dingy black color; and when old, he is gray and grizzled. At no period can he be honestly called a handsome or a graceful animal, but his courage and tenacity of life demand our respect.

In point of teeth the tame pig has sadly degenerated. The wild boar of India, which is the type of the barbaric pig of all ages, is armed with long semi-circular tusks. Those in the lower jaw sometimes attain the length of eight or nine inches. They curve outward and upward, and the edges are kept sharp by the pig's constant habit of sweeping them against the tusks of the upper jaw. The sawlike edges and points with which he can cleave tusks to carve an enemy are almost incredible. A hunting-dog is frequently cut nearly in two by a single stroke of a boar's tusks, and horses and men are occasionally killed by boars which have become tired of being hunted and which try to infuse a little variety into the affair by hunting their enemies. When wounded in an extremely ugly dangerous beast to face on foot, unless the hunter is a lawless ruffian who is capable of killing him with a rifle. One can scarcely imagine an Englishman so lost to all sense of decency as to shoot a fox, and yet to that crime ranks, in Anglo-Indian estimation, the heathenish outrage of killing a pig in any process except that of pig-sticking.—H. L. Alden, in Harper's Magazine.

A Stork as a Mouser.

A LARGE and handsome whooping stork, says the Council Bluffs Nonpareil, can be seen daily strutting around the yard at the residence of Prof. Paige in this city. The elongated bird was purchased by the professor during a visit to Mexico some months since and has become quite tame. Among other food that the stork relishes is a nice fat mouse. Mrs. Paige has a small wire trap in the house, and whenever a mouse happens to wander thereit, he becomes a sweet morsel for his stockship. The other day Mrs. Paige noticed the bird standing near the barn watching intently at a small hole leading beneath the building. The stork remained in an attitude of watchfulness for nearly half an hour, and Mrs. Paige, becoming curious, concluded to watch and see what followed. Finally she saw a mouse creep into sight from under the barn, and the same instant the intelligent stork pounced down on the mouse in a sweet morsel for his stockship. The other day Mrs. Paige noticed the bird standing near the barn watching intently at a small hole leading beneath the building. The stork remained in an attitude of watchfulness for nearly half an hour, and Mrs. Paige, becoming curious, concluded to watch and see what followed. Finally she saw a mouse creep into sight from under the barn, and the same instant the intelligent stork pounced down on the mouse and gave it a couple of digs with its long bill. Then it picked up the mouse and threw it into the air, catching it first and then eating it. After performing this intelligent feat, the stork resumed his watchful vigilance at the mouse hole, and after watching sharply for over an hour seemed to grow weary of his work or get tired out of patience, and marching to the house entered the kitchen, and picking up the mouse-trap, from which he had so often been fed, he returned to the barn and set the trap down near the hole, evidently appreciating the nature of the trap, and believing that it would catch more mice for him. If anyone has got a brighter bird than that we would like to hear from it.

Bedding for Cattle.

THERE is no farm work, considering the outlay, that pays so large dividends as the procuring of some sort of bedding for the cattle, for in not only keeps them clean—a great point in itself—but also promotes their growth and thriftiness, and the additional accumulation for the manure pile will more than pay for the labor. There is usually a large amount of litter that goes to waste, that if thus utilized would be of great service. Straw, oats, cut corn husks, etc., are valuable, and line sand it not objectionable, for in itself it is one of the most absorbent of beds, and as it is a large absorber of liquids, and is of real benefit to clay land, there is no solid reason why a few loads of it may not be judiciously used. A farmer of our acquaintance late in the fall takes his trucks, puts in long stakes, and, makes a four foot deep box and gathers forest leaves. One man gathers them with rake and basket, and another treads them into the basket. These leaves are stored away in an unused stable, and what can be crowded into a bushel basket makes a fine bed for a stable of cows for a couple of nights, and are fine absorbents. There is no farmer but that can provide bedding of some kind, and also have dry, wholesome stables for his cattle, and, if he commits his interests, and once fully tests the value of plenty of bedding, he will always in the future practice bedding his cattle and stock.—Exchange.

Dressing the Head.

IN dressing the head, more errors are made by men than by women, although men are very fond of indulging the idea that when fashion is talked about women only are referred to. Glass canes, muffers, ripons are often the causes of colds. Beside, the hair is rendered unhealthy and the hearing often interfered with. It is one of the virtues of the silk hat that it stands up a little from the head. If, as should be, there are a few holes made through it, there is opportunity to air without draught. The more open bonnets of women do not screen them so much to evils of overheat, and inure them to exposure when not too severe. The latter is the natural covering of the head. It is some what doubtful whether any other is really needed. So we do not criticise women for treating the hat as a mere head ornament and not a protection. Where changes of climate or exposure require it, they only need to have at hand some other protector. It was an improvement when hat strings were made to come behind the ears instead of over them. Fashion rejoices in change, and we are not disposed to find fault with her so long as she does not interfere with health.

IN SLUMBER-TOWN.

[MAMMA AND BABY AT BEDTIME.]

"I WON'T," she said, "It is sleepy time,
I will sing you such a sweet little rhyme—
Something that you can understand—
About wee things do in Slumber-Land."

"No," he said, "I will not be good!
I'm a coiber—I love to a great big wood;
It is made of cakes and candy and toys,
You can go to Slumber-Land, if you please."

"But listen!" she said; "in Slumber-Town
Everybody is lying down,
And all the creatures, from mice to lion,
Have something better than they can wink!"

"Then they don't know how to wink," he said,
"I think it is stupid to be in bed!
I am going to learn the world all down,
And I don't want to go to your Slumber-Town."

"But I must," she said; "in Slumber-Street
You could not keep your head up, I'm sweet,
And sometimes, there, you meet face to face
People you'll meet in no other place!"

"Oh, that," he said, "will not make me go!
I like a lion best, you know,
With a monkey; and I do not care
To meet strange people up there!"

"But listen!" she said; "in Slumber-House
The cat forgets how to catch the mouse;
The naughty boys are never there
Most in a corner or on a chair."

"Well, that is a little better," said he,
"But I am going, at once, to see;
I'm a Cupid, I'm a little boy,
And this is my trumpet—ship ahoy!"

"But listen!" she said; "in Slumber-Room
Book beauties have no eyes to look in,
The best of them all, the very best,
You must think it you choose—its name is Rest."

"Why, that's a queer name for a flower," he said,
"But you needn't think I am going to bed!
I'm a rubber ship, I'm a rubber ball,
I splendid rubber—and this is my cave!"

How quiet the cave grew, presently;
The sailor, and ball, and rubber, all were so,
And what she saw was to "little brigand"
Drawing her into Slumber-Land.

Two curtains white, with their fringes known,
Red and kiss fast into Slumber-Town,
And she knew that the restless little feet
Were walking in Slumber-Land, sweet.

HOW BESSIE SENT A NOTE TO HIS MAMMA.

OUR is a part of the country where it is very hilly, there stands a red house at the foot of a steep hill, whose side is covered with birch and pine trees, and a thick undergrowth of brush. In that house live two little children, and what do you think they did one day?

Their mamma was busy baking, and they went to play in the little brook in the yard. They were making a bridge of stones there, and that morning they finished it. Then Susie's white kitten tried it, and stepped across without once wetting her dainty feet.

"Now that is done, and what'll we do next?" asked restless little Susie.

"I know," said Bennie; "let's go to the barn and set the trap down near the hole, evidently appreciating the nature of the trap, and believing that it would catch more for him. If anyone has got a brighter bird than that we would like to hear from it.

"Oh, I am so tired!" said Susie, moving her head a little, but it hurt so that she began to cry again. The little white kitten rubbed against her and purred, but it could not help her. Yes it could help her! A bright idea flashed into Bennie's mind.

"Let's send a note to mamma by kitty!" he exclaimed. "I've got some paper in my pocket and a little stub end of pencil, and I can print."

Silent, stopped crying and watched with great interest while Ben slowly printed down those words on a torn slip of paper.

"Dear MAMA, We all up here Tangtil in a mine mess. BEN."

Then he found a piece of str,ng in his pocket, and tied it neatly around the white kitten's neck. When that was done, he turned her head down the hill towards home, and clapping his hands at her, said in dreadful tones:

"Scat! Scat!"

The frightened kitten darted down the hill, and was quickly out of sight among the bushes.

"Now my turn to come!" said Susie, with a sigh of relief. But Bennie had thought of something else.

"I'm going to send a letter in a boat, now," he said, and again he slowly pinned on another ragged slip.

"I'm going to send a letter in a boat, too," he said, and again he slowly pinned on another ragged slip.

"Don't go, We all up here Tangtil in a mine CAM."

This he fastened to a piece of birch bark, and launched it down the little tumbling stream, which carried it swiftly out of sight.

"Now she'll come pretty soon," he said, sitting down in perfect faith to wait.

Their mamma baked her bread that morning, and then she baked pies and made cookies and got her dinner over her, and she had time to think much about the children. Then she stepped to the door to see how they were getting along, and called them, but there was no answer.

The wind blew in her face and the white kitten came running to her.

"Where are the children, kitty?" she asked, looking down, and then she spied the note pinned around the white furry neck. She took it off and read the blurred words:

"Dear Mama, We all up here Tangtil in a mine mess. BEN."

She caught her sun-bonnet off the nail and started, but hardly knew which way to go. They were up the hill, of course, but she might miss them. As she stood irresolute, right in sight down the brook came the little birch-bark raft, with a piece of paper pinned to it, which was too wet to read, but it told her all she wanted to know, for now it was plain that they had gone along by the brook.

So she started swiftly up the hill, passing the bushes aside, with the little white kitten running between her and the

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

BY TELEGRAPH AND MAIL.

Domestic.

A FREIGHT TRAIN ran into a crowded excursion train near Raleigh, N. C., on the 20th, wrecking the engine of the freight train, several cars of the passenger train, killing three men, and wounding fourteen others, three, it was believed, fatally. The conductor and engineer of the freight train were arrested.

INTELLIGENCE was received at El Paso, Texas, on the 19th to the effect that the Indian Chief Victoria had been killed in the Mexicans, and most of his tribe either killed or captured.

IT by the 31st only six bodies of the lost on the lake steamer Algoma had been recovered. Piers of the wrecked steamer were scattered along the Michigan shore for a distance of seventy miles. No complete list of the passengers on board of the Algoma could be furnished, owing to the fact that the foolish Cunard company had no duplicate register of passengers.

THE amount paid for conveying the United States mails by sea during the fiscal year ended June 30, last, was $1,795,856, of which $187,500 was paid for the transAtlantic mail service, and all to foreign steamship companies except $1,984, earned in sea-postage by the American line from Philadelphia.

SECRETARY SHERMAN stated on the 31st that under the Resumption act there was an accumulated fund for the redemption of outstanding legal-tender notes of about $140 000,000, being about forty per cent. of the amount of notes outstanding; redeemable on demand from that fund, and as small a sum as it was deemed prudent to hold for that purpose.

THE value of the exports from this country of domestic provisions and tallow during the nine months ended September 30 was $103,722,590; same period previous year, $81,193,055.

HARMON GOREN, a fourteen-year-old pupil of one of the Cincinnati schools, who had been suspended by the Principal of the school for truancy, shot himself in his classroom on the 31st. He says the Principal called him a coward. He entered the left breast and penetrated the lung. The wound was probably not fatal, unless inflammation should set in.

ACCORDING to the census report there are in Chicago and its suburbs 3,702 manufactories, which employ 185,807 persons, and represent a capital of $80,052,102. The product for the year ending with May last was $285,-400,000.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made in Chicago to which a new and independent church is to be organized, to be under the pastoral care of Rev. H. W. Thomas. It is to be undenominational and to be called "The Metropolitan Church," the services to be held on Sunday evenings in Central Music Hall.

JAMES B. DOYLE, whose conformity in the counterfeiting line has long been recognized by the Secret-Service Bureau, was arrested in Chicago on the night of the 31st. In his person and in his getrauk were found a large sum of money and United States bonds worth apparently $200,000. These subsequently proved to be counterfeit. Doyle is a resident of Hartford, Ill., and is the uncle-in-law of Brad Foster, the well-known counterfeiter. Simultaneously with Doyle's arrest the Government detectives arrested in New York the engraver of the well-known $50 counterfeit plate, named Charles H. Smith.

Personal and Political.

PRESIDENT HAYES and party arrived at San Francisco on the 19th, from their excursion through Oregon and Washington Territory. They left the same day for the Yosemite.

THE Democratic State Greenback Convention met at Providence on the 19th and nominated Presidential Electors and candidates for Congress.

THE committee of the Rock River Conference to whom was referred the paper of Dr. H. W. Thomas made a report on the 31st to the effect that the issues between Dr. Thomas and the Church are not fairly stated in such paper; that they (the committee) disclaimed certain views put forth in a recent sermon by Dr. Thomas as things they were teachings of the M. E. Church; that Dr. Thomas is essentially out of harmony with the doctrines of the M. E. Church, and that this will appear whenever the issues are fairly tested, and that such issues should be made. The committee recommended that the case be referred to the Presiding Elder in whose district Dr. Thomas resides, for action, and at the request of Dr. Thomas, Drs. Jewett and Hatfield were appointed a committee to investigate the matter and confer thereon. Also the translation of some other brethren the Conference stood ready to meet at Syracuse next October, and also intimated that the committee to prefer charges would do so in three or four weeks, and that the trial would take place at the Centenary Church, Chicago, of which church the Doctor still desired to remain a figurehead.

AT the Woman's Suffrage meeting in Worcester, Mass., on the 25th addresses were made by a number of persons connected with the Association. Colonel Higginson said women were not yet ready for the ballot, their failure to vote for school-officers in New York and other places where they are entitled to do so being proof of the assertion. Women must vote their own sex, and then the ballot will be freely given them by men. This speech was the general theme of discussion, women taking strong grounds against the position of Colonel Higginson.

LATER NEWS.

THE St. Petersburg Gazette of a recent date says Russia, which usually exports 230,000,000 bushels of grain, will have to import some this year in consequence of the very general failure of the Russian crop. The prospects for future good harvests, moreover, were not encouraging. An insect, which has defied all efforts to exterminate it, and which has proved the greatest enemy of the Russian farmers, has made the fields its abode. Being sheltered by the snows during the winter, it renews its work of destruction each spring. The prospect before the people is anything but pleasant.

RECENT OCCURRENCES.

Roasted to Death.

CINCINNATI, October 22.

A FIRE resulting in the loss of five lives occurred about eleven o'clock today in the shoddy factory of Benjamin Hay, owner of Second and Broadway. The fire caught from greased rags falling upon the stairs, and before the engines could be brought to the spot the whole building, owing to the inflammable character of its contents, was in flames. Twenty girls and women, under the supervision of Mary Power, the forewoman of the sorting department, were at work in the sorting and storage rooms on the third floor. These women knew nothing of the presence of the fire until once of them saw smoke coming through the cracks in the floors. The alarm was raised "Fire!" and started for the staircase in the storage-room. Most of the women at this floor were in the storage-room, only eight then being in the sorting-room. The forewoman ran to the door between the two rooms and locked them on the outside, and then ran down the stairs. Toward the eight immediately following she called out the order for them to save their clothing, stopped to take off their working dress and put on those they wore going to and from work. The consequence was when they returned to go down the staircase in the storage-room they found the flames had cut them off in that direction. Then turning toward the sorting-room, all three were found to be in flames. Their only chance was the windows. Only two of the six were seen at the windows. Two, after were identified as Mrs. Rachel Dorsett and Mrs. Catherine Hoffman, were discovered by the women, and fell almost at the threshold of the door through which they had in vain endeavored to escape. Among those Margaret Welsh and Miss Curran, fell almost more than ten feet from the window sill, and were picked up and carried to a neighboring store. Those who saw Miss Curran fall say that she struck the pavement on her head, and her skull was broken like "No, no; I cannot." Then turning, she rushed back into the flames, and was seen no more until her dead and charred body was found lying near those of her companions.

The general opinion is that the unfortunate victims were to blame for the terrible tragedy, the statements of the forewomen, many firemen and theirs. Annie Maddin, who first gave the alarm on the floor, testified that after they had ample time to escape after the alarm was given.

JOHN ADAMS, a farmer living near Iron in Adams County, Pa., in 1805. When they were four years old their mother was left a widow. Being destitute of means, the mother was unable to support herself and children. She sent them to live with different families in various localities. Thus found a home in Westmoreland County, Pa., with a farmer named a miller. John learned the blacksmith's trade. They never saw or heard of one another after leaving their mother, and each supposed the other was dead. Over fifty years ago John Miller started on foot, and finally became a stonecutter on the Butler turnpike, in Allegheny County. He holds the position of foreman of the force, and is one of the most reliable workmen on the road. Over fifty years ago John Adams was with another apprentice in the blacksmith shop, when they got into a quarrel and had to settle matters with their fists. Adams was getting the best of the fight, when his opponent picked up a broad-axe and struck him a terrible blow on the head. Adams fell to the floor, and his companion, thinking he had killed him, ran away. Adams was picked up and carried to his mother's house, where he lay for months between life and death. He finally recovered, but was a cripple for life. He was left with a terrible scar on his head, and a portion of the skull was gone. He was unable to learn a trade, and became a wanderer. He married, and his wife died, leaving him with two children. He was unable to support himself and children, and was compelled to send them to the Orphans' Home at Pittsburg. Then found a home in Westmoreland County, Pa., with a farmer named Garfield is elected; both branches of Congress will be Republican, and the party can run things to suit themselves hereafter, and if Democrats and Greenbackers don't like it they may go to—Canada.—Traverse Bay Eagle.

Talk about hard times. There is not a ship carpenter, house carpenter, painter, plasterer or stone mason in Charlevoix, who has on more work than he can do, and work extra hours. The sound of the hammer is heard on every hand, and everybody is doing something.

Prof. Henry Gordon has decided to make Charlevoix his future home, and will remove here as soon as he can dispose of his property in Wayne county. It has been his intention for some time to locate in Northern Michigan and Charlevoix is his choice from among all the Northern Towns.

Prof. Gordon left yesterday for Traverse City, where he will hold a musical institute. The professor has made many friends in Charlevoix, who regret parting with him, but are comforted by the hope that we shall see him again with us before long. In the brief time that he has been among us he has greatly elevated the musical status of Charlevoix.

I am a Greenbacker. I didn't run on a Democratic ticket. I didn't make a bargain with the Chairman of the Democratic County Committee. The Democrats ran a set of d—d blackleg, and the Republicans are dirty. I didn't make a blasted fool of myself, and whoever says I did is a —Republican. I think I'll run on a straight ticket next time; I like mine straight. It—is the Republican—d—d M. C.—k.

Oh, the mournful wail that goes up from the Petoskey Democrat man. The country is given up to Grantism, Credit Mobilier, and the devil. The man that done employs to do his writing refuses to be comforted, and gnashes his teeth in the keen agony of despair. If there ever was a newspaper that deserved to be buried deep in the ashes of a political Herculaneum, that paper is the Petoskey Democrat. Its precedents are unmeasurable, and its morals infinitesimal. To lie is its meat and drink. In this respect it only lacks equality with the bulk of Democratic journals by its utter insignificance.

"Our Tramp."—A gentleman who was in Charlevoix during the little episode which deprived Charlevoix county of her goal, and who made the acquaintance of "Frank Tracy" the traveling gentleman who now languishes in State Prison for his connection with the affair, spent the past summer in Chicago, where he met parties who, from the description our informant gave them of the "tramp, have good reason to believe is the same person who destroyed the Darlington jail about two years ago in the same manner which he disposed of ours. If it be the same person, his true name is Brown, and has respectable and well-to-do relatives in Chicago and Kenosha. Disappointment in an affair of the heart, in which a young woman figured as party of the second part, threw him off his mental balance and he took to the road. He had a man's fur setting fire to things, and even ignited the woodwork in the street, carrying matches in his shoes for the purpose. When in a right condition he is a person of no little genius. He stated here that he had been in a burning scrape once before, and related experience which dovetails into what those gentlemen let off to him in other matters. There is no doubt that it is the same person.

BETTER AND BETTER.

Returns from Larger Majorities Than First Reported.

The smoke has cleared away, and the result is rather sore. The Republican victory is more than glorious, and proves that a campaign of lewd sentiments and lowdays will always prevail against a campaign of lies, slander and forgery.

The Republicans have recaptured the capitol from the rebels in all the branches of government. Republicans will displace the best men the Democrats have in the Senate, giving it a tie, with a Republican Vice President to decide all questions. In the House of Representatives we shall have a majority of from 12 to 16.

The victory is complete and overwhelming.

Garfield has an electoral majority of 27, with three doubtful States yet to hear from.

Mr. Hubbell's majority will not be less than 6,000. Mr. Pettit's speeches aided materially in this result. Two years ago Hubbell's majority was 1,709. Pratt only ran 22 ahead of his ticket in his own county.

Britton, for State Senator, received fifty-two majority over Eaton, making allowance for a probable Democratic majority in Manitou county.

Fraser's majority over Washtel is about 600—by all probability it will exceed those figures.

The following are the majorities in the counties: Garfield and Jerome, 547; Hubbell, 536; Britton, 112; Fraser, 483; Cooper, 614; Upright, 572; Green, 274; Kent, 210; Norton, 433. Bear Lake and Chandler to hear from.

Our Banks Letter.

To the Editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel:

Our election passed off very quietly last Tuesday. One hundred and twenty-four votes were cast, being the largest vote ever cast in this town.

Mrs. John Parsons met with a very serious accident last Tuesday evening. As Mr. and Mrs. Parsons were returning home from a visit at one of their neighbors, they stopped at Wm. Flanagan's store. The result of the election in our town had just been received at the store, and some cheering was indulged in. Mr. Parsons had just got out of his buggy when the horses became frightened and ran away, throwing Mrs. Parsons and her baby out of the buggy. Mrs. Parsons was taken up insensible, and it was at first feared the injuries might prove fatal, but she is now recovering. The baby was not injured. The buggy was a complete wreck.

The weather being favorable for doing up the fall work, most of the farmers have got their crops secured.

The winter schools will soon be in session. Dr. Leach is to teach the Avery wood school, E. B. Marshall the Antrim school, and Eugene Byers the school in the Sea district.

Mrs. H. W. Beach and Misses Nettie and Addie Hawks left for Grand Rapids last Friday.—Mrs. Beach to visit her sons who are attending school at Grand Rapids, and the Misses Hawks to attend school.

Mr. H. B. Thompson, who owns part of what is known as the Indian Garden property, is building a house upon it. Mr. Thompson has always been a very pleasant and sociable man, but when he gets into his new house he intends to look down upon all his neighbors.

Quite a number of people around here intend getting out cordwood and railroad ties this winter, if there comes snow enough to haul on.

Marine.

Schr Sea Bird, 85 cords wood, Lewis & Ackert to Racine.

Nov 3—Schr Sea Gull, 85 cords bark, 40 cords wood, master to Milwaukee.

Schr Forest Queen, 400 barrels lumber, 30 cords wood, Newman to Chicago.

Steam barge Superior, Charlie Clark, Bachelorette to Milwaukee.

Schr Mission Monitor, 200,000 feet lumber, 9,000 ties Gibson & Porter to Chicago.

The English Gamekeeper.

THE tall and slow yet slightly stooping form, the red-brown coat, ghoul at the shoulder and sleeve where the gun rubs; the dog, whistle at his button-hole; his pocket knife, strap's a basket of tools in itself; his gun, which he loves as an old companion, and the badge and "bane" of which he is so accustomed to that he never thinks of aiming—he simply looks at the object, still or moving, throws the gun up from the hollow of his arm, and instantly pulls the trigger, staying not a second to glance along the barrel." He a perfectly civil to every one; and with a willing manner toward his master and his master's guests, he yet has a wonderful knack of getting his own way. Great on dogs, his opinion is listened to and taken by everybody, and by this knowledge many "tips" are gained. At the farmhouse he is invited to sit down and take a glass, for his good is welcome, and his favor is always worth cultivating. He is proud of his occupation, and delights in the woods and the fresh air. He thinks the smell of the earth a fine thing, and the hedges and grass "as sweet as sugar," after a shower. If a man asks him to take a glass of ale he never says "No;" and when gentlemen give him "cigs," he is "much obliged," and takes them home to his "missus." He is not afraid of wet weather, for he does not regard it; and a great coat he scouts as a thing of no use. He has likewise his faults. Tame as his nature is, and the interest and woodmen who transgress his rules, he shows a hasty temper, and is apt to use his strength with utter freely, without thought of consequences. When he takes a dislike to a man, nothing will remove it; his hatred is mortal, and he is full of prejudices. Conservative in his way of thinking, the impressions of his youth are strong within him, and he looks with contempt on everything which diverges from his early-formed habits and manners. Yet he never gets sour of life. The "tips" that are forthcoming from plenic parties when frequent his grounds in summer, and from the young gentlemen who have stunned freeing rabbits with him in winter, add a certain softening element to his surroundings, and as he is proud of his cottage, of his wife, of his family, of his gun, and of his dogs, he is on the whole as comfortable and happy as may be.—Exchange.

Ancient Rome.

THE ROMANS were keen, businesslike men, who never pretended to be above trade, even though they were of superior rank or wealth. It did not cost much to keep a man in the early centuries, the yearly allowance for a slave being thirty-seven dollars and a half, while a free-lance hired for forty-four dollars a year. Corn was the main stay, fifteen million bushels being consumed annually, and oil, honey were used in large quantities. Among the rich, epicures were more common and more extravagant than in the modern world. Fortunes were spent on single banquets. Men were absurdly lavish. And yet everything was very cheap even in this extravagant city. The market reports show that lambs and fish were only six cents per pound, beef four cents, fish two cents, a pair of quail thirty cents, eggs six cents per dozen, wheat sixteen cents per peck, four pounds of large grapes two cents; chickens, per pair, 8½ cents, and ten heads of lettuce two cents. The Romans were not very fond of any meat save pork, and this they consumed sparingly. Beef was not popular, being used mostly for sacrifices. Game and fish were favorite articles, and many choice imported fish brought prices. The common people could not afford many luxuries, as wages were low. The yearly pay of a journeyman mechanic was from ninety-five dollars to one hundred and twenty-five dollars and board. Food cost forty dollars and clothing fifteen dollars per year. From the account of Furbiger it seems that goods were very low. A pair of shoes cost thirty cents; one pair of woman's garters, thirty cents; one fat hat, one dollar; one tunic, sixteen dollars to thirty-six dollars; one toga, twenty dollars to twenty-eight dollars. A man could get a share for two cents. The Romans spent large amounts on other luxuries beside those of the table. The imports of flowers, perfumes, ointments and dresses from India in one year amounted to two million three hundred thousand dollars. In furniture they had their decorative art crazes, the citrus-wood tables being favorite articles for squandering money upon. In Cicero's time it was not unusual to spend fifty thousand dollars for one of these tables, and Seneca, the stoic, who prated of the virtues of abstinence and the vice of luxury, owned five hundred of them.

The Romance of a Second Marriage.

THE history of M. de Lesseps' second marriage is a curious one. The lady who is his wife was nearly twelve years at the chateau of which she is now the chatelaine, staying on a visit. Her family name was De Braga. She was of Spanish descent, but English nationality, her father having filled a post under the British Government in the Mauritius. Mlle de Braga was the perfection of the French Creole type and very romantic. She had been in the habit of listening to accounts of the diplomatic and material difficulties which M. de Lesseps overcame in Egypt, Paris and London, and of the courage and humanity he displayed in assisting plague-stricken Frenchmen when he was Consul at Alexandria. The relations she heard impressed her as the narrative of Othello's adventures impressed Desdemona. Mlle. de Braga saw in M. de Lesseps a hero of modern times. His courtliness, chivalrous manners and vivacity enchanted a girl, used to the indolent painters of the Isle of France. She was at his chateau we when all Europe was astir about the achievements of the Suez enterprise. Mlle. Braga grew silent and solitary. One day, in the garden, she saw de Lesseps walking on a terrace. She plucked a rose, and, going up to him, begged of him for her sake to wear it stedmast. She asked whether she did not mean it for his son? No. It was for himself. Her host explained to her that he was on the wrong side of forty, while she was not yet nineteen. That did not matter. What his age was had never occurred to her. She had only thought of his greatness and his goodness in short, he was her ideal. How was it possible for a man reared on the sunny side of a Pyrenean mountain to reason down the feelings this confession aroused? Time was given to Mlle. de Braga to reflect, and she was made to understand that no friendship would be but were she to change her mind after the banns had been published. The marriage is a celebrated contemporaneously with the Suez fetes.

An Unceremonious Invitation.

IT is natural for a hospitable man, encountering a friend unexpectedly, to ask him unceremoniously home to dinner. The man invited, having a degree of common sense, does not expect an elaborate repast under the circumstances, but is willing to accept the ordinary fare provided for the family. This is a sane view of the matter—but it is a view that six thousand years of masculine exasperation has not succeeded in getting inside the head of the female woman. The woman is a good soul, we all know that, and we are all ready to bow down and worship her and admit that we could not, under any circumstances, get along without her; but when it comes to this matter of dinner-giving we are forced to own up that the dear thing has a great deal to learn. When a man comes home, say twenty minutes before dinner time, and tells the best wife that ever yet was put into this sinful world that he has brought another man unexpectedly home to dine with him, an expression will come over the face of that excellent woman that will make the man—even though he be tough and seasoned—tremble. She becomes rigid directly. When the dinner comes on it is a good enough dinner for anybody, and the other man enjoys it, and says so; but a train of cars could not convince that woman that he is telling the truth. "Mere politeness," she says, coldly, when the fact that he ate three slices of beef, was helped twice to pudding, and made a clean sweep of things generally, is timidly presented to her consideration; and she adds that "he, at least, had some consideration for my feelings." And when a woman, even the best of women, refuses to believe a three slices of beef, what is a man to do? Submit to the inevitable, and refrain from inviting a man to take pot-luck with him unless assured that the top overflows with milk and honey.

The Worship of Animals.

IN the infancy of mankind almost every system of mythology included the worship or veneration of animals. In one land the deity was a bull, in another it was a serpent, in yet another it was a bird; and in lands like India and Egypt almost every known animal was either an incarnated deity or demon. The same reasons that caused the animal to be deified and worshipped would, in a short time, surround its worship with numberless myths and legends, that would be remembered long after the occasion that called them into existence had been forgotten. As an instance of this, we need only cite the return of the Israelites in the desert of Sinai to the worship of the golden calf—the image of the Apis god of the Egyptians—they probably being no more aware that under this celebon was represented the sun-god in the zodiacal sign Taurus than were the mass of the Egyptians themselves. Still another reason why these myths and legends would remain long after their real meaning had been forgotten is due to the metaphoric nature of all early languages; and this cause would act still more strongly if the various shades of meaning of each metaphorical term were not limited by accurate writing. Brinton says the Algonquins, who translated "Michabo" into "The Great Hare," lost by a false etymology a great part of their religion, the true meaning of the term undoubtedly being "The Spirit of the Light," or "The Dawn."—Dr. W. H. Gardner, in Popular Science Monthly.

THE agricultural ant is a pattern of neatness. The most minute particles of dirt are carefully removed, and the whole body frequently and thoroughly cleaned, especially after eating and sleeping. They assist each other in the general cleansing, and the attitude of the ant under operation is one of intense satisfaction, a perfect picture of muscular surrender and ease. An ant has been seen to kneel down before another, and thrust forward the head under the face of the other, and the motionless, expressing the desire to be cleaned; the other ant understood this and went to work. Sometimes this is combined with acrobatic feats, in which these ants excel, jumping about and clinging in a remarkable fashion to blades of grass. Sometimes the cleansing ant hangs downward from the grass, and to her the ant operated upon clings, reaching over and up with great agility to submit to her friend's offices. Evidently moisture from the mouth is used for washing.

THE POOR MOTHER-HEN.

THANKSGIV'NG, chuckity, chuckity, chuck!
Had no eye a hen such wonderful luck?
Two fi-ne gobs, fluffity fluffity,
Nestling so cosily under my wings.

High my, hickory, dickory, dock!
Mrs. Grimalkin gives me a shock!
Seeing my Top-knot taking a drink,
She put out her paw and quite at a wink.

But Top-knot is smart, and Top-knot is spry,
She gave paws the slip in the glimmer of an eye.
That's what I call cheek! It's easy to see
What a scion, by nat'ry, my Top-knot will be.

Higgidty, piggidty, wiggidty, wee!
I'm also under Cuthbert Coward, as she!
Flies like a gull-ock, prickly as cobs,
And Snow-drop and Trotty, whiter than milk.

And Puck, who will do one great credit some day,
He hear that chick crow is good as a harp;
And Speckle, and Pinkie, and Brown, and Pitkie,
And Rowdie, and Blackie, now what do you think?

Was ever a prouder mother than I?
Were ever such children under the sky?
Lambs, kittens, babies and other wee things,
Are pi-tty, but dear me, they never sing!

HYDE-ZOOZIE.

HOW CELIA WROTE A COMPOSITION.

CELIA was twelve years old; a bright little girl at her lessons, anxious to be at the head of her classes, and a general favorite in school. No matter how long or hard the lesson, the first little face to greet the teacher's marked it off to the class was sure to be Celia Brown's; hers the first voice to exclaim "Oh, I reckon we have got it for once right hard; and I certainly will do that!"

Accordingly, Miss Nelson was prepared to receive a bright look of acquiescence from Celia, at least, when the composition exercise came to the class that a composition would be expected from each one on the Friday of the following week, but she was consulted. To her surprise, Celia's face said as plainly as words could have spoken, "I can't possibly do it, Miss Nelson, and it's of no sort of use to try."

"What are we to write a composition about, Miss Nelson?" asked one girl, whose face matched Celia's in expressiveness. "I don't know enough to tell of any one single thing in this whole world!"

Miss Nelson smiled.

"Oh, yes, you do, my dear," she replied, pleasantly. "I think you will find you know almost something worth telling about self when you put on your thinking-cap and make up your mind to try. At any rate, that is what I expect you to do—try! And I will let you know afterward how nearly you have succeeded in your composition."

Celia Brown never said a word. She just closed her lips tightly and shook her head in utter despair. It was of no use to talk to her; a composition she could not write. Pages of spelling, half the grammar or geography, a page of arithmetic, would not have daunted her anything like the stern word composition.

"Nonsense," said her father, laughing; "it is quite time you learned to use your mind in composition. Seven-teen or twenty-seven chapters of history will not do you half the good that six lines of careful, sensible composition will do. And you will not find it difficult, Celia, if you do not make up your mind against it. Did Miss Nelson give you a subject?"

"Yes, papa—salt," was the reply, in a disgusted tone. "The idea of such a subject! I can't think how anything interesting could be written upon salt!"

"Oh, write about the 'cat,' exclaimed Willie. "I wouldn't write about salt, either; nasty stuff! Just write on the 'cat.' I'll tell you exactly what to say. I can write a composition. Pooh! It's easy. Wait till mamma sends me to school. Now you just write this. 'The cat is a real nice animal. It's got three white feet and one black one. It's got a nice little head, too. It has four dear little kittens; and it washes her face every morning with her paws. She licks her face—this ain't nice; but what can you expect from a poor silly cat? It don't know any better. And ours is named Thomas Matilda, after nurse's brother and sister."

"Bravo, Willie!" exclaimed his father, joining in the hearty laughter of the others at the little boy. "So you can write a composition. I'd advise sister to call on you for help, by all means."

"That composition might do for you, Willie, dear," said Celia, still laughing; "but I think it would sound rather queer to Miss Nelson."

"Why, you needn't care. Ace it sounds. Need use, papa? She just tells every single bit she knows. That is the way I'm going to do when I write compositions."

"That is tolerably sound advice," said her mother, looking at her, with a smile. "Just put the thought of how it will sound quite out of your mind, and write down all you know about salt."

The next day was Saturday. About ten o'clock Celia sat down at the little table in her bedroom, and made up her mind to try.

"Salt!" she wrote at the top of her paper, and then there came an awful pause. "Oh, dear, what shall I say about it? Salt! salt—" Well, I'm sure I don't know what it is exactly, unless it's salt! and here Celia's thoughts were interrupted by a laugh. "I'll get old Webster," she continued, thinking aloud. "Let's see now," and she climbed the leaves rapidly to the S's. "Um! here it is: Salt—chloride of sodium—a substance used for seasoning certain kinds of food, and for the preservation of meat, etc. It is found native in the earth, or it is produced by evaporation and crystallization from water impregnated with saline particles." Well, I do declare! If that's all Mr. Webster has to say about salt, how should I be expected to know any more? The idea! Why, I don't know any more, and I don't mean that! Well, I do say Miss Nelson is unreasonable." Celia wriggled herself nearly off her chair, sighed, groaned, fanned herself, slid her pencil inside, and finally ran Willie's call, jumped up and ran from the room, leaving the composition still to be written.

She and her little brother mounted the seesaw in the garden, and during this pleasant pastime Celia interrogated him upon what he knew about salt. Willie didn't know much, but what he did know he generously told.

"Salt," he informed her, was very good to make icecream with. That Grandpa liked it." He also told her "it 'alt though he didn't."

Celia laughed so at this that she could not answer any questions, and went back to the house to take her music lesson and afterward she drove out with her mother and the two little ones, and she entered her room at night to find the big sheet of blank paper staring her in the face in such a reproachful way as to look down upon it, before going to bed.

She tried again on Monday, slightly, and on Tuesday. Wednesday she had no time, that being one of her mine days, and Thursday was her very last day of grace. She made a very strong effort then, but at her very best she could think of nothing superior to what Mr. Webster's dictionary said: and, in fact, nothing at all beyond one simple fact, that "salt was a very exceedingly useful substance."

In despair she laid the matter before her mother.

"My dear," said Mrs Brown, "if you have honestly tried and cannot write a composition, you may yourself write a letter to Miss Nelson asking to be excused, instead of to doing it. Tell her exactly how hard you have tried, and ask her to give you an easier subject."

Mrs. Brown's eyes twinkled as she gave this advice, and her little daughter went up to her room much comforted.

Before dinner, however, she found that the spoiled milk was given to the pigs instead of to him-self, he gave up his attempts.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

SOFT WATER should always be used in making soups.

WATER slightly acidified with nitric acid is recommended for soaking scanty, a very little ammonia added to the water greatly accelerates germination.

OYSTER FRIED IN BATTER.—Take one cup of sweet milk, one egg, a pinch of salt and flour enough to make a stiff batter; dip the oysters in the batter and fry one at a time, each one having a little batter on it.

DOUGH BISCUIT.—Take two ounces of butter, two of flour, two of grated cheese, a little cayenne and salt, make it in a thin paste and roll out very thin, then cut in pieces four inches long and one inch broad, bake a very light brown and serve as hot as possible.

LEMON TEA.—Boil gently for two hours two ounces of liseed in a pint and a half of water, with a little lemon peel shred finely and an ounce of lump sugar. Strain and add enough lemon juice to make it agreeable. This is useful for a cough and should be taken warm. Spanish liquorice may, if liked, be boiled with the linseed.

CREAM made very late in the season and stored in a cold place will keep sweet, because active fermentation is prevented. If it be skimmed away when it comes from the press, and care is exercised in making it from good, sound apples, it will not become rancid, but in a moderately cool cellar in a tight cask or in bottles.

A DELICIOUS breakfast cake may be made by taking enough bread sponge to make, when risen and baked, a cake about two inches thick; knead into it a piece of butter about the size of half an egg; after it is in the tin put on the top little bunches of butter and then cover it with the white sugar and ground cinnamon; when baked the cake will be a sort of crust over the cake. This is very nice with coffee.

A SPOKEN, in the Rural New Yorker reports his method for causing apple trees to bear every year. "In three years of Darling Henry IV.'s reign beards, cut square, came again into fashion, and many others a bearing on one side, just as the fruit was about the size of hickory nuts, knocking all the apples off one-half of the tree. The next year the alternate side took its turn, and he had plenty of apples for annual use. His trees stood in a rich soil that was cultivated, no grass being allowed to grow.

DARNBROOK LIQUEURS.—Ammonia, especially the stronger kinds, is very dangerous, a few drops being enough to injure a person. Even the usual fat cleansing purposes it should be handled with great care, that the gas, which is given off freely in a warm room, be not breathed in large quantities, and do injury to the delicate lining of the nose and mouth. Bromine is also highly dangerous, and in which caution should be exercised. It is very volatile, and the vapors are well known to be used for flammable. When employed for removing grease or other stains, from clothing, carpets, etc., it should be used in the open air, or in a well ventilated room. Growth of the Beard in History.

A FRENCH paper gives some haphazard selections from a history of the beard. In the earliest Pagan times the primitive deities were represented with majestic beards. In France they played a great role from the reign of Pharamond downward. Under Clovis, indeed, the beard of the King was an object of peculiar veneration, and indeed, every individual was more or less sensitive regarding his beard. It is related that after the great battle of Poitiers, Clovis sent a deputation to the defeated Alaric requesting him to come and touch the victor's beard as a token of alliance. Far from accepting the invitation in the spirit in which it was offered, the enraged King of the Huns seized the Frankish embassies by their beards, and bound them out of the room by their reverend locks. The unfortunate envoys returned rather crest-fallen to Clovis, narrated what had happened, and swore "on their beards" that vengeance was sufficient. Subsequent reigns the beard was the object of numerous sanctimonies, and the fashion of wearing it was changed as frequently. Sometimes it was worn long, sometimes close-clipped, now peaked, now pointed, now concentrated with curls or gold trinkets. Even in the sacred manuscripts of Rome itself beards were the objects of much discussion. Different Popes laid down different rules on the subject. One Pontiff enacted that beards should be worn square as or straggently directed that the razor was never to be applied to the chin. Isidore of Alexandria, Cyprian, and Jerome and Chrysostom engaged in vehement controversies about the mode of wearing hair about the face in the fourteenth century. In France the final triumph of beards dates from the Crusades, when the simple style of the great artists, who indulged largely in those appendages, was closely followed by the sovereign and other magnates of the land. Under Henry III. shaven chins were the mode, the musketeers wore curly, and dressing Darling Henry IV.'s reign beards, cut square, came again into fashion, and many others a bearing on one side, just as the fruit was about the size of hickory nuts, knocking all the apples off one-half of the tree. The next year the alternate side took its turn, and he had plenty of apples for annual use. His trees stood in a rich soil that was cultivated, no grass being allowed to grow.

The liabilities of the firm were placed at $800,000 and the assets at $400,000. The failure is attributed mainly to a shrinkage in the value of goods held by the firm for a long time.

The official census of Rhode Island is 276,530—males, 133,034; females, 143,496. The whites number 269,884, and the colored (including 67 Indians and 27 Chinese) 6,646.

The cost of transportation on 6,903 star service routes (aggregating 20,368 miles) for the year was $2,761,483. RECENT OCCURRENCES.

Public Recognition of Heroism.

On the afternoon of the Seawanhaka dinner, last summer, three boys, Fred R. Wright aged 11, Herbert D. Dean and Edward L. Lamb, were fishing in a rowboat near the float of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club. As they saw the burning steamer coming through the flats, they started to their oars, and rowed quickly to the rescue. They reached the shore at Ward's Island just as the steamer grounded, and their was the second boat on the spot; the brave boys succeeded in rescuing fourteen persons among whom was the Captain of the steamer. The matter came to the attention of the Irving Club, an association composed of prominent residents of Harlem, and it was unanimously voted to make a public recognition of the gallant conduct of the boys by presenting to them gold medals. The medals are handsome pieces, made by Tiffany, and each is a representative of the boys in their town in the act of rescuing a person. Around this was the inscription: "Presented by the Irving Club of New York City." The reverse side bore the following: "For bravery displayed at the burning of the Seawanhaka, June 25th, A. D. 1880. Of Good Deeds."

Railroad Accidents.

Eleven accidents caused the death of one or more persons, 22 caused injury but not death, while in no less than 308 cases, or 90 per cent. of the number, there appears to have been no injury to persons serious enough to record. For the year ending with September the record is as follows:

A Very Singular Case.

Thebe died on Tuesday last at Bayview a very singular case. The most singular person that has ever lived—a female with a normal head and the body and arms of a child. Visitors to Bayview have noticed the deformity for years, and it has attracted largely the attention of medical men. Her name was Kate Bandwith. She was received in the cold County Almshouse in 1873, with her mother. The latter died of the cholera and the child was cared for ever since by the city. On the separation of county and city and the creation of Bayview Asylum for the city poor Kate was removed to the latter place. During all the time she has been in the institution all the attendants had with each day and year until it became to call Kate Bandwith, but below the neck nature was at a standstill. She occupied to the day of her death the child's chair she occupied when three years old, and slept in the same cradle. Her arms and hands were beautiful, and she would busy herself with great pride in such matters. This was also a singular feature in the case, as she seemed to be insensible to all else passing around her. This singular condition was ascribed to epilepsy, and this is the cause of her premature dissolution. She ate as much well, and seemed to her usual health up to fifteen minutes before her death, when she was seized with an epileptic fit, from which she never recovered. Katie was forty-eight years of age at the time of her death. Forty-two of those she was cared for at the county Alms House and Bayview Asylum, and it is perhaps questionable to the exact treatment she received in the institutions that she had survived so long.—Baltimore Gazette.

The "Ladies' Deposit Company."

The London newspapers furnish a number of interesting details of the "Ladies' Deposit" swindle in which, from all accounts, the fraudulent Mrs. Sarah E. Howe, must have not been considered in the same category. She and her agents have repeatedly denied that the scheme was an experiment, that it had been in operation for forty years in Alexandria, Va., where it had been founded by capital amounting to three or four thousand pounds. Quakers and many of all religious and unprofessed creeds to be object of the Deposit was never to accumulate in the hands of the fraudulently, especially its feminine portion. Depositors were always willing to pay seventy-six per cent. per annum as half a quarter of that rate would have brought fortune of the depositors are asserted to be still in Russia, and never to have given their interest from the fabulous one, which has materially helped the "bank" to pay off any creditors. The bank has been revealed that a large number of the depositors were from the middling ranks of societies is entirely erroneous. Many of the first families in that city are declared to have invested. Mrs. Howe with the care of their funds to the extent of from $100 to $1,000 each, and to have consulted, as well as the business men, very many dames. The house in Rue Rambuteau street, where the bank was founded, is very expensively, though tawdrily, furnished. So many costly articles were bought and carried there last spring at the time of its removal from the Quartiers that the whole neighborhood wondered at such activity. There are doubtless, various branches of the Deposit, and not a few of the depositors are reported to be residents of this city. Mrs. Howe's record, which has been industriously traced, shows to extreme disadvantage. Her age is given at sixty, and she is described as short, fat, very ugly, and so illiterate as to be unable to write an English sentence, or to speak without making shameful blunders. How such a woman could have been so successful a swindler defies conjecture.—N. Y. Times.

Pullak didn't know it was loaded, but Bartolf did, and while the former examined it he attracted largely the attention of medical men. Her name was Kate Bandwith. A Successful Woman Farmer.

Miss Libbie Sutherlander, whose career as a farmer, stock-raiser and school teacher has made her notorious in this part of the State, is a woman about thirty-eight years of age, and affords a striking example of what a woman with a will of her own can do toward getting along in the world. Fourteen years ago, at the death of her father, Johnston Sutherlander, she inherited a large estate, consisting principally of farming property, heavily encumbered with debt. It was the old homestead, and Miss Sutherlander could not bear the idea in seeing it pass into the hands of strangers, and determined that it should not. Although then only twenty-four years old, and with no more practical knowledge of life than an ordinary country lass, she assumed sole charge of the estate, determined to clear it of debt. Having an old mother sixty-two years of age, a half sister, and helpless brother all ages, the two orphan children of a deceased brother, and a brother in the last stages of consumption (a promising boy, his daughter last death), and a little expectancy that she could ever be married, she had a large undertaking. Her only capital was her energy and industry, especially its feminine portion. Depositors were always willing to pay seventy-six per cent. per annum as half a quarter of that rate would have brought fortune of the depositors are asserted to be still in Russia, and never to have given their interest from the fabulous one, which has materially helped the "bank to pay off any creditors. POLLY ANGELINE.

"Twas on a winter evenin'—
The clock had just struck nine—
I sat inside the farm-house,
While Polly Angeline
Sat by the kitchen window
Where the moonlight fell so free,
While she shed I was keepin'
Awake around the fire—
I was awake around the fire,
While she was sleepin' beauty.
The sparks flew higher an' higher.

Now she was just the sweetest
That I ever did know—
Ah, while I am addressin'
I'll tell you how it flew.
At last to me an Polly
Says she, says she to me,
"Will you take the yarn more jolly
To pop a feelin some?"
To pop a feelin some?
Says I, "You're right, I guilty,
Excuse us you were born."

I know that she was willin';
I thought I just would guilt;
I'll ask her then and there
To hold her how I fell.
The yarn was pop'd, you know,
An' she was talkin' gay;
Says she, "Now, Jonathan,
Just hold your hands a while,
But nothin' would I say."
The yarn I kept a-poppin'—
I wished I was away.

At last she took the popper
An' laid it on the floor;
An', neither I nor popper,
The words I had in store
An then, a moment stoppin',
She raised a feelin' sweet
An' whispered, "In the poppin',
Just hold your hands a while."
So I without her free,
I felt my heart a-leapin',
But I was bound to try her.

Now Christmas was married
Just one year to a day,
An' every child in town
With children made an issue,
They make a body's head ache,
Allow our house is small!
An' it just keeps us hoppin'
To clothes an' feed 'em all—
To clothes an' feed 'em all.
An now I must be stoppin'—
I hear the baby bawl.

JACK'S "AUNT SOPHRONY."

Jack Hadsons's mother was out of health, and his father thought a voyage to Europe would do her good, so did the doctors, but what was to be done with Jack? There were no grandmothers and no maiden aunts in the family on either side, a state of things much to be regretted, but quite impossible to remedy on short notice, and as for taking the boy to Europe, a pet monkey, a young gorilla or a small grizzly bear would have been just as desirable a companion as a boy who never had been made to mind, and who was lightly given to mischief from morning till night.

Mrs. Harding could not bear to leave him, he was her only child, and consequently spoiled, but she loved him as mothers will love even bad boys. However, for others, Jack was not to be moved by Jack's sulks or cossing, it was a matter of life and death to Mrs. Hadson's health that they sailed Master Jack was safely established in Bassett, his father's native village, as boarder in the house of Deacon Paleg Hills, his Grandmother Harding's brother.

The deacon was the pride of the family and, though he seemed very old indeed to Jack, considered himself in the prime of life at fifty-six, while his wife, some ten years younger, was, in her own eyes, a young woman, though she was, or professed to be, an invalid. Bassett was a stupid little town, but boys of all kinds love the country—if they do not live in it. Everything was new to Jack; he was overjoyed to get away from school, to hunt bees' nests, to shoot squirrels, and get the turkeys in, they were frantic, chase the calves round the home-lot and see their awkward knobby legs and heavy tails by this way and that in their efforts to escape, and above all things, it was his delight to ride the aged horse to pasture, slip off his high back and let the lars down, turn and turn about and struggle back on to that slippery eminences for the homeward ride.

But the keen air of the hills gave him a tremendous appetite: he was hungry all the time, and never had enough to eat. The deacon was a poor man and a stingy one besides; and his wife was as "near" as he; the fare was of the coldest and coarsest, bacon and rye bread were the staples, and pie the luxury; the deacon would have it, and Jack was allowed a small segment because he was a boarder, while Peleg and Lisha, Josh and Elsen, were denied, and looked at Jack with longing eyes.

Jehiel, a youth of nineteen, son of the deacon's first wife, helped himself, but he did not care for anybody but himself: and he could not be induced to give Jack more than a bite from the corner of his farm, night and morning, and during summer vacations going into the harvest field with the farm hands to pitch on hay, rake, bind, etc. She his earned from touching school over $3,000, paid off the debt of the old homestead, and besides greatly improved the property. Beside teaching and raising corn and grain, she has been an extensive stock raiser. As a farmer she has no superior in this section. Her wheat crop averaged this year forty-two bushels to the acre, the largest yield in the county. In personal appearance Miss Schoonmaker is tall, with a robust but comely form and a pleasing, intelligent countenance. She is extremely kind-hearted and generous, and will spend her last cent for the benefit of a needy friend. In politics she is a strong Democrat, and has been frequently solicited to run for Congress, but declines. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a liberal supporter of the gospel. Miss Schoonmaker has had many suitors for her hand, but, although naturally inclined to matrimony, has steadily refuses to marry, on the ground that her husband might in time object to being burdened with the support of the old people and her helpless brother-in-law and sister-in-law, which might cause domestic troubles. Besides, she says she has enough to do now without having the responsibility of a husband, too, which she might have to do if she were to marry.—Kerhonkson (Ulster County, N. Y.,) Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Vitality of Seed.

It is a general opinion that wheat will retain its vitality unimpaired for centuries. Stories are extant that grains of wheat taken from the Egyptian pyramids have germinated and grown. Perhaps some of these stories may be true, but they are few and far between, and in the manner in which the seed has been kept; also, it may depend to some extent upon whether the seed is plumpable or is a weed. How long weed-seeds will keep good in the ground has never been found out, though we will grow often enough, no doubt. In grading down the ground near my house the past year, the soil uncovered for several feet bore a most prolific crop of smartweed. The soil has not been disturbed in that depth for more than a century, if ever, for there are pear-trees on the ground more than 100 years old. Now, the probability is that the seeds of the smart-weed may have sunk in the soil, and been kept by successive rains and about once every other day, with his axe broken. He had unfinished job to finish

The Growth and Prospects of Charlevoix.

The busy season is about to close, and we are called to look back over the past season of navigation and note the growth Charlevoix has made, and take a glance into the future.

We can say truly that our progress has been satisfactory. Our growth has not been feverish nor artificial, extravagant nor blasted.

The growth of Charlevoix resembles that of the sturdy oak—lasting and substantial—rather than that of the transient poplar, which throws out its weak branches as to most every breath, and, reaching its growth early in an easy way to the eastern winter.

Charlevoix has come to stay; and in general will continue when some of the mushroom railroad towns of northern Michigan shall pass her homage.

During the season we have graded and graveled our principal business street, and in place of the dry dusty sand of a year ago, we have a hard clean road-bed, and have substantial walks, right from the edge of the depth of our beautiful sand.

Seventeen buildings, of all classes, have been erected within the corporation, thirteen of which are residences, and several resident are raised, enlarged and improved.

Three of our business establishments on bridge street have been enlarged to double their size, and other enhancements are contemplated.

Saying nothing of the enlargement of our present resort and the inauguration of the new one, the prospects for the growth of Charlevoix the coming season are more flattering than ever. Two brick stores will be erected, to say nothing of other enterprises in contemplation.

Negotiations are in progress now looking toward the purchase of several of our most beautiful building spots, with a view to erecting good residences thereon.

In short, the public eye has turned in the direction of Charlevoix, recognizing it as one of the future important towns of Northern Michigan.

The prospects for Charlevoix continue to brighten.

The Liberal Club Lectures.

EDITOR SENTINEL OF THE SENTINEL:

Allow me to say that the meeting of the Liberal Club on the evening of the 1st inst. was well attended notwithstanding the preparations many were making for the election on the morrow.

The lecture by W. A. Norton, was also well delivered, and well received, containing all who were there that the young lecturer was a man of more than average ability. His lecture was constructed something after the style of some of Miss Van Buren's speeches, very argumentative—neither tearing down nor building up, assuming no opinion, merely asking the question, "Whom Shall We Believe," making a good address and leaving the minds of his hearers just where he found them, only wondering how it could be possible for a man of his ability to be without a belief.

Talbert Carpenter delivers the next lecture on the evening of Dec. 6th, subject, "Religion and Science from a Liberal Standpoint." All are cordially invited to attend.

The Methodist parsonage is nearly ready for the plasterers.

Frank Ramsay has commenced his school in District No. 7.

Mr. Stone has his store nearly completed, and soon expects a large invoice of general merchandise.

Harvey S. Glean has the contract for building the school house in District No. 5, which, when erected will be an ornament to the Town.

F. J. Meech is shipping to this place his supplies for his camp upon the Jordan.

H. B. Severance, who formerly taught school in District No. 2, of this Township, has again returned to visit friends.

We would like to tell the readers of the SENTINEL something which Peter Bowen of this town told us, and wished us to have it put in the paper, but really we have forgotten the item, anyway it is something about a big deer's neck account pushed by Mr. Bowen or have—guns Mr. "Hoff." Pete says he can prove it, so we think it it all right.

How Women Supplement Nature's Head Covering.

Few persons have any idea of the amount of human hair and other hair imported yearly to this country. Three-half of the women knew what they were wearing in the shape of head-gear they would be almost ready to fall into hysterics. A little light on this subject may be interesting to thousands of both sexes. False hair is not so fashionable as it used to be a few years ago, when fans were imported to this country; nevertheless, at the present time as extensive business is being carried on throughout the United States. In London it is computed that fully six tons of human hair are imported every year, and that the trade increases annually. In order to meet the demands of this and other countries, there must be a regular harvest, which can be looked forward to at a particular season; and as there are different markets for black and gray hues, for fine and coarse quality, so is there a market for light hair distinct from the market for dark hair.

Light hair is almost exclusively a German product, and is collected by agents of firms and companies who visit certain parts of Germany and Switzerland a few years ago light hair was the more valuable, and one particular golden tint was so much prized that the dealers only produced it for favorite customers, and sold it at double its weight in silver. The rich and silky texture of this much treasured article had its attraction for poets and artists, as well as traders. The immortal Shakespeare delighted in golden hair. Bassanio, describing Portia, speaks of her "sunny locks," and in the Two Gentlemen of Verona Julia says of Sylvia and herself, "Her hair is auburn; mine is perfect yellow." Black hair is only mentioned two or three times in all his plays, showing that Shakespeare considered light hair to be the attribute of soft and delicate women. With painters light brown hair is generally chosen for their subjects, as it clearly demonstrated by a walk through any of our art galleries. It is admitted that the color of the hair of the English people has deepened in tint within the present century, and that this change is owing, in the most frequent inter-marriage since the Napoleonic wars with nations nearer to the sunny South. Whether light or dark the hair partly disposed by the dealer is so closely scrutinized that he can discriminate between the German and French article by the smell alone.

Black hair is mostly imported from Russia and the south of France, except it is collected once every year by the agents of Parisian houses. In various parts of the mountainous country a Breton fair may be met several of these hair purchasers, who travel the country for the purpose of attending fairs and buying up the tresses of the peasant girls. In fact, in many instances, the girls take their hair to market themselves, as if they were selling some kind of provision. These girls are shorn of their hair just like so many sheep, one after the other. They stand round in a ring ready for the scissors with their caps in their hands and their long hair combed out and hanging down to their waists. By the side of the operator is a basket, into which every cutting is placed accurately, tied up in a wisp. The girls or women of Brittany do not lose much of their personal adornment by having their hair cut off, as they wear close caps which entirely prevent any part of their clothing from being seen. The portion of the crop most suitable for perukes is purchased by a particular class of people, by whom it is cleaned, carded and prepared to a certain stage, and then disposed of to wig-makers for ten and twenty times more than its original cost. It is then retailed at a big profit; for choice heads of hair, like those old pictures or choice old china, have no limit to the price they occasionally command. It is only some fifteen years since it was used to any extent in this country, but since that time it has developed itself to a large and almost incredible degree.

A great deal of the hair that is now imported is not, however, human, much of it being "oak" hair, taken from Chinese cows and other animals. In Europe it has been in use for many years, and great attention is paid to its preparation for the different markets. —N. Y. Mail.

Hints to Stammerers.

I COMMENCED operations by writing out a very large number of ordinary sentences, as they presented themselves. Having examined those sentences one by one, and knowing well where I should fail in uttering them as they stood, I sought to devise some method by which those consonant initials might be got rid of, or, at all events, diminished. It struck me that if I could contrive by any artificial division of the words composing each sentence, to bring the consonants at the end of a division, instead of at the commencement, a great object would be gained. This achieved, for consonants at the end of a word present no special difficulty, the glottis having been already opened by the preceding vowel sound; the terminating consonant flows out almost as a matter of course. It is as when we pour liquid from a full bottle. At first it runs intermittently, with a "glug-glug," but when once enough of the liquid is out to admit the air freely the obstruction ceases. In a similar way the object of the stammerer is to prevent the glottis from closing when once it is opened. To ascertain whether or not my idea was practicable, I wrote out in the ordinary way one sentence at a time. I then rewrote the sentence, and divided into simple words, but making every initial consonant the final letter of the preceding word. Having so divided the words composing the sentence, I then read them over aloud many times, according to this artificial division, to try if they were pronounceable without any gross peculiarity. I practiced this method incessantly, both in reading and colloquial speaking; and, to my astonishment, I discovered within a few weeks that I was wielding an instrument which was almost invariably successful, and with this consciousness of increased power my confidence daily increased, so that I could frequently speak on without regard to any method. All this had known me up to this time were perfectly astonished, and anxiously inquired by what means so remarkable a change had been effected; for mine, be it observed, was no mere occasional hesitation, but a most habitual, unmistakable and lamentable stammering. Shortly after this change, I had numerous transactions, which involved a large amount of talking, with a gentleman occupying a somewhat superior position, and, being anxious to know whether the working of my mental machinery was at all observable to outsiders, I asked him whether he had ever observed any peculiarity in my speaking. His reply was: "No; only that you speak very distinctly."—Chambers' Journal.

Dengue, or "Broken Bone Fever."

DENGUE, or broken-bone fever, also known as "dandy fever," "bucket fever," and "banquet fever," is said to have made its first appearance as a malady in the West Indies in 1827, at which time it was also committed in the southern part of the United States. The disease, as has previously been stated, received the name "dengue" from the Spaniards of the West India Islands, from their word dengue, denoting prudery, which expresses affectness—a pain in the bones and stiffness of the body being the principal features of the sickening disease.

During the past few months reports have come from every quarter in the Southern States regarding the prevalence of this troublesome but not necessarily fatal disease. But few, if any, deaths have been made known from its effects. Nearly every citizen of Savannah has had a touch—some light, some severe—of the malady, and not one of them can give a definite explanation of the tortures of the disease. It has spared no one—adults, children, Irish, Noll, slow little Bess, even loving Cousin Kate, were all content to be so very commonplace. They never cared to know what was proper, and stylish, and fashionable. But she "gazed, wondered and admired," "Thus every minute Aunt Pomeroy was it the house.

And then she "did" it.

The remarks the others would smile so provokingly whenever she tried to be real extra polite; and when she went out with some man everybody treated her like a little girl of whom nothing was expected beyond "ti-tuks" and "I-spy-you-a-mile." Her only ambition was to make Eats quite by herself.

And at last the opportunity came.

"I expect to go past Aunt Dolly's to-morrow," said Dr. Delevan one day.

"What a pity!" exclaimed mamma, thinking of the annual meeting of the Woman's Board, which she could not possibly leave. "The dear old aunties will expect to see some of us. Suppose you take Susy?"

Papa made no objection, and Sue hurried into the library to begin her preparations. Out came a dainty-lined box, of which she carefully took some Noll was in blissful ignorance, and which these thought dreadfully stupid for anything but a grown-up lady name. It was manner to watch Sue bowing, and curtseying, and repeating elegant phrases before the long mirror. Bess standing here, or sitting there, as circumstances, or the book, demanded. Then came lots of even dainty things, and at the end of act fifth little Bess slipped quietly out. However, Sue could the more easily dwell on her toilet, with no one to ask "why?" and "what for?"

First she laid out half a dozen bits of paste-board, her own secret handiwork.

MISS SUSY DELEVAN.

Cards, to be sure, but no card-case. She did not quite like to ask mamma for hers, but there was the old silver snuff-box that had been her great grandmother's. It would do very well, and went at once into her pocket. Three other things were lacking; a bird for her hat, a chatelaine for her fan and a locket. Cousin Kate had all these, and Cousin Kate would be gone to the Society with mamma to-morrow. Why couldn't she borrow them as well as the snuff-box? She must not say anything about it, because—well, Noll, or somebody, would be sure to laugh, and she did so want to be real stylish, once.

Never was there such a busy forenoon, and Susy never such an uneasy little girl. She was perfectly happy, of course, only when mamma kissed her good-by, and said: "Wear your new gloves if you like, only be all ready when papa comes, and a very good little girl," she felt, oh such a sharp pain, "way, 'way inside, where some of papa's medicine could ever reach it. But even mamma must have wanted her to look stylish, or she would never have told her to wear her new kids. That was what Sue said to herself, as she went slowly up stairs to cousin Kate's room to "finish her toilet."

She fastened the big chatelaine around her waist, between the pretty chip hat on the top of her head, and tied the strip of black lace so tightly over her eye-winkers that they were all doubled and twisted together.

But Aunt Pomeroy always looked uncomfortable, and it wasn't half as bad as that choking sort of pain.

Papa stared a little as he tossed the small lady into the buggy, but who would expect him to know one hat from another? And if he thought Sue unnecessarily quiet, as much the better for the "consultation" over which his thoughts were busy.

"Are you going in?" asked Sue, as they neared Aunt Dolly's.

"I don't know—yes, for a minute; they may not want you to stay. So the old hitching-post is gone entirely! I shall have to take Charley over to the barn."

Wasn't that fortunate! It would give Sue just time to ring the bell, present her card and send her aunt down. As Sue sailed grandly up the walk, tucking her veil a little tighter over her nose, dropped a second to open her snuff- no, card-case—when suddenly, around the corner of the house, came a big, black dog. Sue swung for the latch, the door flew open, and in they went, Sue, snuff-box, dog and all.

"What—what—the—sun!" ejaculated Aunt Dolly, dropping her dish of beans.

"Mercy on me! what is it?" gasped Aunt Lucinda, reaching wildly after her knitting-work, cap, spectacles and "fatso frosta."

"Bless me! it's only little Sue!" said Aunt Deb, picking up the small bundle of dry goods from under the table, and setting it carefully on a chair. There were the real birth-days, when she had her parties and presents; and bad-way between them she "always knew" where Sue herself sent a box to the Children's Home, filled with old toys carefully mended; received the gayest things from the Spaniards of the West India Islands, from their word dengue, denoting prudery, which expresses affectness—a pain in the bones and stiffness of the body being the principal features of the sickening disease.

"Why, mamma! mamma! little Sue's attempts to imitate that lady's grand airs and elegant manners. Matter-of-fact papa, no one—adults, children, Irish, Noll, slow little Bess, even loving Cousin Kate, were all content to be so very commonplace. They never cared to know what was proper, and stylish, and fashionable. But she "gazed, wondered and admired," "Thus every minute Aunt Pomeroy was it the house.

THE BIRD'S DEPARTURE.

Wherefore the Bluebird in his music,
"I think we had better go, dear;
The acres of gold and nipped leaves
Tell of the coming snow, dear."

Queried the Catbird, fretful-soft,
"Must we so soon be leaving?
Trouble we find to build our nest,
When shall we ever take our rest
Oh, how my heart is grieving!
Must we so soon be leaving?"

Piped then the Blackbird, light and gay,
"Dearie! it not be a recess;
Sunshine will follow dark of gloom;
After the snow-joys soon will bloom
Daisies and purple clover!
Dearie! it not be a recess."

Chirruped the Sparrow on a spray—
"Sunny was he, and spiteful—
He! he! is the wing a piece for me;
Hues may fly over land and sea,
Natural Home's delightful!"
Sunny was he, and spiteful.

WHY THEY CALLED HER "ETTY-KETTY."

Her name was Susan Grant Delevan, but they called her Etty-ketty, you would never guess why, and so I am going to tell you. She was the youngest, spryest, most stylish little lady you ever saw, and boasted nine and one half birthdays. Perhaps you don't count the halves, but Susy did. She celebrated every half year—think of that! Only there was a difference. There were the real birth-days, when she had her parties and presents; and half-way between them she "always knew" where Sue herself sent a box to the Children's Home, filled with old toys carefully mended; received the gayest things from the Spaniards of the West India Islands, from their word dengue, denoting prudery, which expresses affectness—a pain in the bones and stiffness of the body being the principal features of the sickening disease.

Four Comets Now Visible.

It is quite unusual to have four comets in the sky at once, as is the case at present. The first of the four is Schaberle's comet, which was first observed last April and is now receding from the sun, after having passed inside of Mercury's orbit. The second is Faye's comet, a small periodic comet, which makes a circuit once in five and a half years. It is now fast passing from view and visible only to the largest telescopes, after a short visit under unfavorable circumstances. The third comet is the one discovered, on September 20th, by Hartwig, at Strasburg, and on the next evening, at Ann Arbor, by Harrington. When first seen, it was very bright for a telescopic comet, and even visible to the naked eye, with a tail some two degrees long. Its spectrum has been examined, and found to be just like that of most other comets—apparently identical with the banded spectrum seen at the base of a coal-gas flame. The comet when first seen had passed its perihelion, and has been continually growing fainter, until now in the moonlight it is an insignificant object. The fourth comet is the one discovered in the Constellation of Pegasus, by Swift, of Rochester, on the night of October 10-11. It is described by the discoverer as faint but very large, and moving very slowly toward the north and west. The moonlight is so troublesome that as yet astronomers, so far as known to the writer, have failed to get any observations on it. According to the computations of Encke, the comet of 1812 had an orbit which would bring it around in 70.7 years, and, as this period is considerably uncertain, its return is looked for almost any time. Until the orbits of the new comets are computed, it is impossible to say whether one of them may not be this object. It was not, however, in 1812 anything but a telescopic body.—N. Y. Independent.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

LAND in grass should be protected the first year from the merciless trampling of stock. In wet weather the grass is much injured, both from the trampling and close grazing.

WAFFLES.—One quart of milk, three eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one tablespoonful each of butter and sugar, and flour enough to make rather a stiff batter. Bake in waffle irons.

REFLECTION FROM LAMPS.—Never set the lamp upon a red table cover; if you can not find time to make a green lamp mat, put a piece of green cardboard under the lamp and you will find the reflection upon your work much more agreeable to the eyes than that from the red cover.

GOLD BALLOONS FOR DESERT.—Take one ounce of sweet almonds, blanched and pounded smooth, three tablespoonfuls peach marmalade, or any other kind of jam, two ounces of fine bread crumbs and two well-beaten eggs. Beat well together, then add one ounce of butter melted to the consistency of cream. Half fill cups buttered cups with the mixture and bake twenty minutes in a slow oven.

MINCE PIES WITH MEAT.—Two pounds of fresh roast beef chopped fine, four pounds of chopped greening apples; two pounds of chopped raisins, one pound nut cut, one pound of finely-chopped suet, one pound of sugar, a quart of sweet pickle with juice; a pint of maple sirup boiled with one quart of cider down to half; tablespoonful of cinnamon, dessert-spoonful powdered cloves and a grated nutmeg; spice well.

CHILDREN'S PUDDING.—Cut up a loaf of stale bread in fingers as for toast, squired and put to soak in a pan of cold water. When going to mix, squeeze the water out of the bread, mash, put the bread in a pan with two ounces of suet chopped fine, two tablespoonfuls of flour, some grated ginger, a little mixed spice, beat well up with a fork; mix half a pound of molasses with a little warm milk; add the suet and bread, and boil three hours in cloth, basin or mold. This will make a large pudding much liked by children.

A HINT TO HOUSEWIVES.—The man who has been exposed to heat and fatigue, and is suffering from thirst, does not indulge freely in the use of cold water. He calls for tea or coffee, the hotter the better, and is soon refreshed. But the poor horse, reeking at every pore, cannot call for drink. The careful owner wisely withholds the cooling draught till the animal has had time to cool. A livery man, who has had a long and successful experience, finds it wise to treat his horses as he would himself: he treated, not with a cup of tea, but with copious draughts of warm water. This allays thirst with no possible danger, since it is not the water that burns the horse, but the violent change, caused by too sudden lowering of temperature by swallowing cold water.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York World says. "I have recently learned what appears to me to be the true method of coloring and stripping a rag carpet before it goes to the weaver. A method which insures against the necessity of adding every few days more rags to make up the right amount. The rule for twenty-five yards is, one pound of cotton rags for one thread on each side of the stripe. Two pounds will make two threads on each side, and four threads requires four pounds. Weigh the rags previous to coloring them, and then stripe according to the weight. Cover no one same rule for the plain stripes. Putting in three threads you will need fifteen pounds. Wind your own stripes. Laboring [illegible] to try this plan, for it will save there much trouble after the carpet has been taken to the weavers."

Eggs as Food.

Eggs are another article of cheap and nutritious food when we do not find on farmers tables in the quantity economy demands. They are very convenient to take to market, and this is the disposition which too many farmers make of them. They probably do not fully comprehend how valuable eggs are as food; that, like milk, an egg is a complete food in itself, containing everything necessary for the development of a perfect animal, as is manifest from the fact that a chick is formed from it. It seems a mystery how muscles, bones, feathers, and everything that a chick requires for its perfect development, are made from the yolk and white of an egg; but such is the fact, and it shows how complete a food an egg is. It is also easily digested, if not damaged in cooking. A raw or soft boiled egg is always as easily assimilated as is milk, and can be eaten with impunity by children and invalids. The average egg weighs a thousand grains, and is worth more as food than so much beefsteak. Indeed, there is more nutriment concentrated and nourishing food than eggs. The albumen, oil and saline matter are, as to milk, in the right proportion for sustaining animal life. When eggs bring no more than twenty cents per dozen, it is much better economy to find a market for them in one family than at the store. Two or three boiled eggs, with the addition of a slice or two of toast, will make a breakfast for a man, and good enough for a king.

An ordinary hen's egg weighs from one and a half to two ounces; the shell of egg, from two to three ounces; the egg of the sea-gull and the turkey, from three to four ounces, and the egg of a goose from four to six ounces. The solid matter and the oil in the duck's egg exceed those in a hen's egg by about one-fourth. According to Dr. Ed. Smith, in his treatise on Foods, an egg weighing one ounce and three-quarters consists of 120 grains of carbon, 182 grains of nitrogen, or 15.26 per cent. of carbon, and two per cent. of nitrogen.

A writer in the Scientific Farmer estimates that the value of one pound of eggs, as food, for sustaining the active forces of the body, is to the value of one pound of lean beef as 1,584 to 900. A fresh pound one pound of eggs is about equal to one pound of beef.

A ham may be calculated to consume one bushel of corn properly, and to lay ten dozen or fifteen pounds of eggs. This is equivalent to saying that three and one-fourth pounds of corn will produce, when fed to a hen, five-sixths of a pound of eggs. But five-sixths of a pound of eggs contains about five pounds of corn for its production. When eggs are one shilling per dozen, that is 56 cents per pound, and a bushel of corn fed, producing 10s. worth of eggs and 56 cents.

Judging from these facts, eggs must be economical in their production and in their eating, and especially fit for the laboring man in replacing Consti-Provisioner.

Looking Back to '79.

That the great campaign now upon us will exceed that of 1876, when the "to West philosopher" was in the field and fray, no one doubts. Time works wonders; but with some things it can make no change, as the following from our esteemed fellow citizen, H. F. Behrens, Esq., will show: I have sold the Blabing Drops since 1872, and have never heard a complaint; I know families who would not be without the Drops for anything. Every dealer says the same.

A POLITICAL processman at Hoxbarton, N. H., asked while a young man and his sweetheart down from what he considered her unbecoming position as a footless of Liberty.

[Bay City Tribune.]

DR. A. A. PARTE, of this city, says: St. Jacobs Oil is splendid. All whom I have sold it, pronounce it the best medicine for rheumatism and pain they ever used.

Gas-Tar vs. Poultry Lice.

A short time ago my poultry house was swarming with lice; it could not be entered without having the clothing gray with insects wherever one touched the nests or roosts. If a hen brushed my hand with her wing, dozens of lice could be seen running over it. Indeed, so desperate did affairs become that even to look at the poultry house produced a sensation of crawling things. Swabbing the roosts and sprinkling the nests with kerosene had no perceptible effect. Fumigating with gas-tar and sulphur not with no better success. The youngest brools of chickens grew weak, languid around for a time, and finally died. Some of the hens also gave evident signs of weakness, and their combs turned a sickly color. At this stage of affairs I applied for a remedy to a friend noted in poultry-raising as well as in other things (Prof. J. B. Turner). I learned that twenty years before he had painted the inside of his poultry house with gas-tar, and, although keeping constantly a large number of fowls, had not been troubled with the since. I got a few quarts of gas-tar from the gas works, at 10c. per gallon, and with a common paint brush painted the roosts, nests, boards, and every crack and crevice where lice could be found. This was done on the morning of a clear day, and by night the house was dry enough for the chickens to roost in it. Before the tar was applied the old nesting material was removed, and the floor, which is of dirt, was well scraped and sprinkled with wood ashes. The chickens began to improve from that time forth, and in less than two weeks not an insect pest was to be found upon the house or chickens.—Gov. J. T. Tristine.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, NOV. 15, 1880.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

A quarter-centennial of barber improvements at Montreal, which contemplates the turning of the course of St. Lawrence river is being talked up. The estimated cost of the same would be $7,000,000, and would take several years later. The improvements would make a safe and easy railroad crossing if accomplished.

How many of our exchanges tell the report "of sad story in the paragraphs we so often see nowadays, running like this: "Mr. Smoothe has returned from the west and taken up his residence among us again." Three few weeks often tell of glorious hopes blasted, of people who bought comfortable homes or a paying business, have left the same in pursuit of visions of fortune in the west west. They have been there, examined the moving prospects of years, and returned to our old home to again commence at the bottom of the ladder and try to reach forth and position. It seem wearing to people to let well enough alone. Michigan is at least a State as there is in the Union. If she is slowly situated here a foolish to face the uncertainties in the west. He who does not prosper here will be liable to meet the same fate anywhere, or such as one can better afford to live forever elsewhere. Michigan is a good State for the honest, industrious, economical man and he never sick to it, if he has a foothold.

Five hours after the polls were closed on the night of the recent election the result of our Presidential election was known all over the United States and in every European capital. Every man who voted on that day can remember the time when it would have taken ten or twelve days to get the news to London, and at least a quarter of those who voted can remember when it would have taken pretty near as long to get the news from New Orleans to New York. There are men now living who can remember hearing of the death of Washington ten or three weeks after its occurrence. This was in the minister the great event of the close of the last century, and it was an event in Boston for eight days after it took place. The latest news from that Philadelphia on the morning of the 21st of January, 1800, was six days old and from many of the towns of Massachusetts was nearly a month later. Two days after the opening State election of 1801, but 62 of the 308 incorporated towns of Massachusetts (then including Maine) had reported, and it was a month later when the Columbian Centinel announced the full result. The news by sea came still more slowly. On the 15th of March, 1800, that had been no news from Europe for eighty-three days, and it was not until a week later that a sailing vessel, arriving unexpectedly at New York, brought news to the middle of December—more than three months back—of the election of Bonaparte as First Consul, and the adoption of the new Constitution of the French Republic. These methods of communication did not seem slow to the men of the time, and a newspaper once a week was all that was demanded. When, in 1796, the Salem Gazette began to appear twice a week, a good many people thought it was a foolish undertaking. "It was too much," said old John Pickering, "to disturb the people's minds by sending newspapers among them twice a week to take their attention from the duties they had to perform!" Boston had no daily paper until the fall of 1796, and then at first only three or four months. A cargo coach was the earliest vehicle in the country, and New York and Boston were practicable about as far apart as Chicago and Yokohama are today. Whether a constant knowledge of every considerable event that has happened on the face of the civilized globe within the preceding twenty-four hours is conducive to human happiness or not may be a question, but the possibility of having such knowledge must remain as a distinguishing achievement of the middle half of the nineteenth century.—Inter Ocean.

Mr. Hubbell.

From the Washington Republican

The campaign exile, the Hon. J. A. Hubbell leaves Washington for his home in Michigan to-day. We cannot let him go without a word of acknowledgment for the splendid work he has done. As chairman of the Republican congressional committee he has for seven months or more performed the delicate, responsible and arduous duties of his position, with rare tact, great sagacity and tireless energy. He has worked early and late at his post of duty in city, refusing to leave it either to look after his re-election or to counsel or help a friend even temporarily. He battled with much Michigan has drawn its appropriety of the solid manufacturing labor by giving him a majority of 7,003 votes, and we shall not be surprised if Michigan should not place the senatorial crown of Zach Chandler upon his worthy daughter. The Republican party considers itself under a debt of gratitude for the extraordinary services of his labors.

LETTER FROM CHICAGO.

The Excitement in the Great City on the Night of Election.

To the Editor of the Chicago Tribune:

I send an telegram sent you after mid night on the day of election, when the returns were coming in, that "Chicago was wild with excitement." This fact faintly describes the feelings manifested during that night.

By ten o'clock the streets were crowded so that one was in a jam about half the time. The Grand Pacific Hotel was the center of attraction, that being the headquarters of the Republican State Committee. As the returns came in, and appear cause up, cheer after cheer broke from the crowd, but was caught up by the crowds on the streets, until entire square rang again.

The Tribune and Inter Ocean had a line of bulletin cards on them throwing figures on a sheet hung on the walls of the building opposite their office. The crowd were anxiously waiting for time. Place came in readily.

"Boston gone—Hancock."

"New York City Democratic enormously rolls up."

"Maine 2,000 majority Republican."

"Massachusetts over 50,000 Rep."

"Ohio gone Republican."

"Illinois 40,000 Republican."

"Ohio 35,000 Republican."

"Chicago about 5,000 Republican."

"Poor Carter."—(Our Mayor)

"Cook County, 7,000 Republican."

"Indiana about 5,000 Republican."

So they came in State after State, each the crowd gave hearty cheers with joy. A Democrat of the Union Veteran Club brought out Corn flag and hoisting it from a drawer and the crowd the crowd was beaten, a cheer from 10,000 throats made the streets ring again. They started to parade the streets singing the chorus, "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah," but soon caught up an enthusiasm and for three hours more than 10,000 men, many of them old Vets, joined in their old war songs until "John Brown's Chorus" was on every tongue, and the men who that day voted as they fought, were again "Marching through Georgia." The enthusiasm was contagious, it was impossible to keep the crowds silent. Cheer after cheer broke forth. Then a battery of artillery brought out a salute of 100 guns to spread the news. When the dispatches began to fill each bulletin was looked to hear the Democratic states, and song after song rang out in the cold night air. Grey haired men, young men and boys all joined in the chorus. No such night has been seen in Chicago since Lee surrendered to Grant.

The few Democrats in the crowd were waiting, hoping New York would go Democratic, but when the news came New York had given a Republican majority of 50,000, they almost away, muttering curses loud and deep.

To night comes the glorious news from Democratic states, too. What the final majorities will be we know not, but they will be larger probably even than any President since the formation of the party.

We can forgive the forgeries, calumnies, slanders and dirty work of the Democratic party in view of the splendid work just accomplished. It is most that the intelligent workingmen of America are now in the true interests of the country, and can not be misled by the partisan rage of a long campaign. The United States are on the eve of a wave of prosperity, and we can trust the old Republican party to carry out what it has begun. It brought system out of war and disorganization; light out of darkness; freedom from the dark night of slavery; order out of chaos; retrieved the credit of commerce; restored again our finances, and made for us the splendid character of being a progressive nation, whose influence is felt all over the world.

Mr. L——, on the 16th of last August a choice coterie were gathered in our sanctum discussing this election just passed. It consisted of ye editor, B. S——, J. S—— a Mr. C——, of Montcalm county, (a neighbor of Chorinus), one of the charlevoix doctors, and Mr. P. K., a democratic physician joining, the remark was made that on Nov. 4 the postoffice man should treat the crowd to something good and a cigar. Mr. F—— agreed to this. As I cannot be one of the crowd, I must propose to have my treat next July, and as I don't take mine straight, I would say a Seltzer lemonade, and propose for my treat, "The glory of the Republican party, its unity and progressive principles."

TOMLIN.

Those who love and darkness would have had it they had been alive when the returns began to come in.

RECENT OCCURRENCES.

The Boers War.

BASUTOLAND may be described as the Wales of South Africa. It is a fifty-province fitted in at the southeast corner of Cape Colony, between the Orange Free State, the Cape Colony and Natal. It is about one hundred and fifty miles long by fifty broad, its length running parallel to the Orange Free States, or, roughly speaking, nearly parallel at some distance inland with the coast line. Some of its table lands are nearly five thousand feet above the sea, while its loftiest mountains is credited with a height of five thousand feet. The soil throughout the whole of Basutoland is very rich, as the vast crops of Jonty, August and even September, One of the wings of the Upper Mountain Tribes runs right up from Kokstad, in the Quaked East, to Maseru, the capital of Basutoland, which latter was delayed some days by a heavy fall of snow, which blocked the passes and rendered traveling slow and perilous. Though Basutoland may be said to be one hundred and fifty miles by fifty miles in size, the spirit in which the inhabitants are credited with a respect of the extreme cold and of the inconvenient nature of the mountains. The most thickly populated districts of the little country extend along its whole length, but are not at present very many miles apart—the thirty miles to the south-west—and by no means to empty for the attainment of these objects are numerous, preferable and thoroughly legal, offending in no degree against the universal right, moral opinion, or intelligent human law.

The Basutos are mostly remnants of tribes who were driven before the Kaffir. Early in the century they took refuge in the natural fastnesses of Basutoland to escape the pitiless ravages of the Zulu conquerors. Moshesh, who on the sheer and rocky hill of Thaba Bosigo that Moshesh, the first paramount chief of the Basutos, united the various tribes, composed of the different clans of his race, made a success of his struggle against the Zulus, and laid the foundation of the Basuto nation. To speak of the Basutos as equal or nearly equal to the Zulus in intelligence and courage at the present moment is a mistake. The Basutos have the disciplined, the cockiness to carry and the taste for fighting possessed by the Zulu soldiers. The Basutos have no military organization, nearly all the young men from the severer climate on their land. The military trait is the tenacity in the Basutos in their aptitude for fortifying or constructing defensive works, and intelligence with which they appreciate any position they may reserve to hold. Indeed, the Basutos' chief difficulties will probably commence when the Basutos, wearied in the open, betake themselves to their mountain fastnesses holds. Thaba Bosigo, the stronghold now held by the Chief Moshesh, is a good specimen of their capacity. It is an isolated hill about four hundred feet high, with a flat or table top, and with sides scraped away by natural causes. The table is only accessible by three or four paths, which are easily rendered impassable to horsemen, and by means of schannes, or stone barricades, can be rendered impassable to infantry. On the mountain is good pasture to graze the cattle, plenty of water and stores of grain and ammunition. Army and Navy Journal.

Address of the Land-League of Ireland.

LONDON, November 6.

THE Land-League issued tonight an address to the Irish in America and abroad. The following are its chief points:

"Fellow-countrymen and Friends:

"A series of events of importance to our country successfully address you. The British Government of Ireland, obeying the dictation of a privileged order of persons, armed and selfish class, for centuries past a burden and a curse to the land and people, have cast to the winds the traditions and principles of the liberalism to which they profess to be devoted. They have appealed to the basest power of the State to arraign at the criminal bar the people of Ireland, banding the Irish with him others of the most distinguished labor ers in the cause of Ireland and her social regeneration. Although our movement is directed against a code of laws so oppressive as to paralyze the national industry of Ireland; although we have been assailed with most vexatious harassing delays, yet we can solemnly declare, in the face of intelligent mind, that all our objects are to keep pace with perfect justice, and by such legitimate means we employ for the attainment of these objects are peaceful, peaceable and thoroughly legal, offending in no degree against the universal right, moral opinion, or intelligent human law.

"The Land League system reviews the work already accomplished by the League and continues:

"We answer will prove of great benefit to the people, and will be carried out from the lodge to the remotest village. In every parish, district, county or province a central body, as the national fund, the primary object of which will be to provide such advice or legal aid as may be needed in cases where abuse in the variety of the moneying system, and to do all else to be done to gain a victory over the leaders of the Irish people.

A Remarkable Social Event.

WESTPORT, CONN., November 4.

MESSRS. FREDERICK, FRANCIS AND FRANCIS SHERWOOD, brothers and the only sons of a family of ten children, celebrated the 50th anniversary of their birth yesterday. The family Bible, containing a record, showed that they were born November 3, 1830. At the entertainment which they offered there were three tables with guests, each brother presiding at a table, and three floral "presences" adding a good look to the wood trio. About the year 1824 the three brothers shipped on as cabin passengers on vessels in New York for sea. They soon became captains, and followed their occupations thoroughly, thirty-five and thirty years, respectively, and, having gained a competence, each retired. It was Captain Francis, as commander of the Caroline in 1847, who bore General Scott's dispatches to Washington, via New Orleans, announcing the capitulation of Mexico and the surrender of Santa Anna. The brothers are hale and hearty, and resemble each other so closely that strangers with difficulty can tell them apart.

A Liberal Editor.

WE were grieved to read the other day of the death of one of Michigan's jolliest editors—almost the last man of a band who published weeklies in the State when a cranikin would pay for a column "ad," and three bushels of corn dumped on the office floor stood for a year's subscription. Never a publisher has more liberal with his space. It was bad work for him to charge for anything except the taxbill and mortgage sales, and he measured short even on that. One day in the years gone by his paper copied an attack on a county official, and old Mark was dozing at his desk when the injured party called. "I'll lick you!" he began.

"You are a coward, sir—a——coward!"

"Mebbe I am," was the editor's complacent reply.

"And I can lick you, sir—lick you out of your established reputation!"

"I guess you could," answered Mark as he fanned the wasp over off his only chaw.

"I'm going to write an article calling you a fool, liar, coward, cur, slanderer, and have you posted all over the town and pay five cents a line to have it published."

"I guess," queried the old man as he whetted his awl.

"Yes, I'll pay five cents a line to have it go."

"Say, let me tell you something," replied Mark. "I've got two hundred more circulation than the Bugle, and I'll publish your article and all for two cents a line and take it out in mulched or corn sickled. Don't trot over to Josh Wilkins, you can help build up your own town!"

Mark would have published it word for word, and the chances are he would run in a cut of a locust or a stump-puller free gratis, but the editorial cooled off.—Detroit Free Press.

From the Talmud.

"WHO is strong? He who subdues his passions. Who is rich? He who is satisfied with his lot." "He who sacrifices a whole offering shall be rewarded for a whole offering; he who offers the fat shall be rewarded for the fat; he who offers a lamb shall be rewarded for a lamb; he who offers a bullock shall be rewarded for a bullock; he who offers a meal-offering shall be rewarded for a meal-offering; he who offers wine for a drink-offering shall be rewarded for a drink-offering. Such is the reward of the righteous in the world to come." "There are four characters in scholars: Quick to hear and quick to lose, their gain is gained by his loss; slow to hear and slow to forget, his loss is counted by his gain; quick to hear and slow to forget, this is unwise; slow to hear and quick to forget, this is an evil lot." "There are four characters in those who sit under the wise: a sponge, a funnel, a strainer, and a bolt-sieve. A sponge, which sucks up all; a funnel, which lets in at one end and lets out there; a strainer, which lets out the wine and keeps back the dregs; a bolt-sieve, which lets out the pollard and keeps back the flour." "He who has more learning than good works is like a tree with many branches but few roots, which, when the winds comes and blows against it, will tear it up and overthrow it, as it is written, 'For he shall be as the heath in the wilderness, and shall not see when good cometh.'" "He who has more good works than learning, to what is he like? To a tree with many roots but few branches, for which, though all the winds in the world blow against it, cannot move it from its place, as it is written, 'And he shall be like a tree planted by the waters, that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh.'" "He who marries for money, his children shall be a curse to him." "Rabbi Jehuda said, I never call my wife 'wife,' but 'home,' for the indwel, makes my home." "Underneath the wings of the seraphim are stretched the arms of the divine mercy: why ready to receive sinners."—University Magazine.

The Chicago Sandwich.

THERE has been great improvement made in the sandwiches furnished in Chicago in the last ten years. In 1870 it was customary to crease the sandwiches in pressed sole leather. The leather was prepared by a process only known to a Prussian and the bread and ham were put in by hydraulic pressure, and the hole soldered up. About four years ago the Prussian would have come and something unkind to a pitcher of a base-ball club, and the pitcher took up one of the sandwiches and pitched it curved at the Prussian's eye. His funeral was quite largely attended, considering his size. A man who was retiring, and who made few acquaintances. But the secret of making the solar sole supper of railroad sandwiches died with him. It was about this time that corrugated iron shutters were invented, and that material was at once utilized to make rolls of sandwiches, while the ham was made of paste-destroying substances was made of common building paper, the whole varnished with neat's foot oil, and kilndried in a limekiln.—Peck's Sun

Counterfeiting.

A BOGUS banknote fraud, perpetrated by a Berne merchant, has resulted in his sentence to imprisonment for three years and a half. Engaged to be married to a young lady, he took her to London in order to marry her, and while there possessed himself of her fortune of three thousand dollars and all the jewelry that he had, and left her at an inn without a penny. The girl got him guilty without any extenuating circumstances.

A HALF-STARVED youth, says the London St. James' Gazette, was charged at the Worthing Police Court recently with stealing a turnip, of the value of one penny. In answer to the charge he pleaded guilty, but said he did it through hunger. He was sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment with hard labor.

We were grieved to read the other day of the death of one of Michigan's jolliest editors—almost the last man of a band who published weeklies in the State when a cranikin would pay for a column "ad," and three bushels of corn dumped on the office floor stood for a year's subscription. Never a publisher has more liberal with his space. It was bad work for him to charge for anything except the taxbill and mortgage sales, and he measured short even on that. One day in the years gone by his paper copied an attack on a county official, and old Mark was dozing at his desk when the injured party called. "I'll lick you!" he began.

"You are a coward, sir—a——coward!"

"Mebbe I am," was the editor's complacent reply.

"And I can lick you, sir—lick you out of your established reputation!"

"I guess you could," answered Mark as he fanned the wasp over off his only chaw.

"I'm going to write an article calling you a fool, liar, coward, cur, slanderer, and have you posted all over the town and pay five cents a line to have it published."

"I guess," queried the old man as he whetted his awl.

"Yes, I'll pay five cents a line to have it go."

"Say, let me tell you something," replied Mark. "I've got two hundred more circulation than the Bugle, and I'll publish your article and all for two cents a line and take it out in mulched or corn sickled. Don't trot over to Josh Wilkins, you can help build up your own town!"

Mark would have published it word for word, and the chances are he would run in a cut of a locust or a stump-puller free gratis, but the editorial cooled off.—Detroit Free Press.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, : : MICHIGAN.

LIGHT OUT OF DARKNESS.

How sweet it was sit down to dine!
Above all viands, rich and fine,
Like Eden bowers in days of yore
That will red roses clustering met.

From mean to mean, double or rare,
With shock and sizzle of heat and cold;
Clean chaos driven in ecstasy round Jones
Across the blasting waters rolled.

And now, at last, the air is free;
The sodden fingers of heaven are dark,
The spirit of—shoulders sea
Is sweet. Earnest my miserable heart.

No help save I from star or chart,
From beacon fire or signal gun;
And night and blackness all my part
The dreadly waters ri——well.

But ho! a light on ocean's verge
Shines from the mountains through my mist,
And flecks with red the thrashing surge,
And I rise the nearer to my rest.

Alas! no temperance tossed was I,
So hindered by the rain and spray,
But, with a lurch, I overboard by,
And for and darkness hit my way.

That if one light be ever in store,
A beacon-ray to point a soaking diver,
The same may have some warning sent,
Or know of my sad fate, whatever.

But ever toward that light I steer,
With steadiest pace and unerring soul,
For in its radiance I see my fear,
My only hope, my only goal.

CONNOR MAGAN'S LUCK.

"I'M in luck, hurrah!" cried Connor Magan, as he threw up his bonniest hat into the air, whence, of course, it came down again. Now he spent the best part of his time in the air, for he was a boy of spirit, and not much larger or wider than a rope-walk, and on this only available array the railroad company have built a few temporary houses for their workmen. They are all alike, except that a morning-glory grows over Magan's door. The whole row is called Twinrip, possibly on the short of "Between Strips." (If the name does not please them, will some one skilled in digging up language roots, please tell me what it does mean?) The atmosphere around these edifices is so filled with hustling, whistling confusion as a shinny with smoke.

Behind the water highway, on the other side, just a few feet beyond the iron rods, a horse-car track and a turnpike offer additional facilities for locomotion. Birds perched on the numerous telegraph wires amid wrecks of kites and dingy penuons—once kites—tells—nothing hurts them; and below the children of Twinrip appear just as free and safe, and seem to have as much delight in mere living as the feathered friends.

The Magans were a light-hearted Irish family, whose cheerfulness seemed better than eucalyptus or smileworts to keep off the fever and ague, and who made the most of the little bits of sunshine that came to them. Tim, a strong-armed laborer, was brakeman on the Road. His wife, a hopeful little body, a woman of expedients, was voted by her neighbors the "cheeriest, comfortingest" woman in Twinrip.

Good luck, according to her, was always coming to the Magans. It was good luck brought them to America—a good luck Tim became brakeman—good luck that the school for Connor was free of expense and so convenient.

Her loyalty to her husband rather smoothed the expression of her views, for she often repudiated to her eldest born his advantages, beginning, "There's your father, Connor—I hope you'll be as good a man! remember it wasn't the fashion in the cold country to bother over the little black letters—people don't have to read there—but you just mind your books, and some day you may come to be a conductor, and step a-mong your own."

No doubt Connor made good resolutions, but when he sat by the window in the afternoon and looked at the dimpling, sparkling river, so suggestive of fishing, or at the green trees filled with birds, he was not as devoted to literature as a free-born expectant American citizen ought to be. The teacher was somewhat strict, and Connor proved to be. Among the children she glowed like a dandelion in the grass, and reigned like a queen among her subjects.

Connor was the scholar of the family, and at length his conscience was sufficiently roused to make him indite an advertisement which did him much credit. He hoped it might be placed in some obscure corner of the paper where it would be overlooked.

But next day, in a conspicuous part of the Cincinnati Summer Sun, with four blanks pointing to it, appeared this rather unusual notice:

"Found, in the Ohio River, a tiny boy, with dress with black sash and red impression around her neck, now belonging to Connor Magan. The father and mother are not deceased. The boy under at present at Tom Wagan's Twinrip where it is convenient for her with all new gloss by the President. Some others need apply."

It was but the very next day after the "ad" appeared that a wagon drove down to Twinrip with the father and mother of the baby.

Didn't they cry and kiss and hug the lost, the found child! They lived on a farm in Palestine, a few miles up the river. A little stream ran into the Ohio close by their door, and the baby was often tied in her carriage and placed on the pridge under the charge of a faithful dog. It was a great amusement for her to watch the ducks and geese in the water. A sudden rise swept bridge and all away. Search had been made everywhere, but nothing had been heard of little Minnie. It had seemed like a return from death to read Connor's advertisement.

And was not the brave lad that saved their child a hero! Again and again they made him tell all about the rescue. Of course they had to take their daughter home, but they made Connor promise to visit them at Palestine.

Soon after the happy parents left, a wash-scene by express to the Magan incontinent, and when Connor opened the hunting-case cover, after changing its position half a dozen times, he found inside his own picture, reflected in it, and after wiping away the spray that would come into his eyes, he read:

PRESENTATION MAGNIFICENT.

From the grateful parents of MINNIE the rescued.

Was not her name a prophecy?

At the sill of the Magan homestead the flood had stopped, hesitated, and then gone back. Maggie always said she knew it would—they always had good luck. The little woman was happier than ever when she thought of the whole train of people that might have been thrown into the ditch—of the cut-off legs, arms and heads, and the poor creatures without them that might have been carried bleeding on the track if it had not been for her faithful old Tim—and of the home with niver a baby, and of the darlint that would have been drowned in the bottom of the Ohio with her ears and eyes full of mud, if it had not been for her slip of a boy.

As for Connor, he felt as if that bright-eyed girl belonged to him, and now that he had a watch towards it, he seemed almost a ready-made Conductor.

When the waters subsided and he went back to school, he studied with a will. His percentage grew higher.

"Sometime," he said to himself, "I will go to Palestine. I will be somebody—maybe a Conductor! And a beautiful young woman with soft black eyes will wave her handkerchief to me as I pass by in my train! And after I make a lot of money!" how full the world is of money that young people are so sure of getting—"after I make this money I will bring Minnie back with me! And she will live in my house with me! And she will say, 'Connor, I am so glad you pulled me out of the Ohio with your driftwood!' And won't that be good luck for Connor Magan!"—Mrs. M. T. W. Caswell, in Write Awake.

WHILE a little girl in Norwich, Conn., was combing her hair the other day with a celluloid hand comb, near an open gas-jet, she accidentally brought her head too near the flame and the comb took fire. The frightened girl lost presence of mind enough to throw it from her hand, and escaped with her hair considerably singed. The comb burned on the floor until it was entirely consumed.

Next, some great book and a dictionary—do not learn Latin, but learn a grammar—and you will soon learn to read it."

THE little Princess Pauline, of Holland, was taken to church for her baptism in a carriage drawn by six horses. She was received at the door by the ecclesiastical authorities and carried up the aisle to the young Queen, her mother, who, showing much emotion, presented her for baptism, herself acting as godmother.

THE fruits of native Indian literature in India are being gradually appreciated. Miss Toru Dutt is not the last of Indian poets. Another young lady, aged nineteen, is engaged in preparing a novelette for publication in which Hindoo domestic life will form a prominent feature. She is assisted by an artist, and originally intended to illustrate the work herself. The book will be published before the close of the year.

IT was in the Galveston Opera-House. The two gentlemen were from the country. After the curtain fell on the first act one of them, who had been looking at the programme, said in a excited manner: "It's an infernal swindle, just got up to take in strangers." "What's a swindle?" asked Jerry. It says the next act is two years later. I wonder if they think we are going to wait in Galveston, at two dollars a day, for two years, just to see this thing out?" They went out and saw the ticket man about it.—Galveston News.

ONE day the poet Whittier was exchanging reminiscences with Miss Abigail Dodge (Gail Hamilton), when he told her how he came to write "Barbara Frietchie." He was very much annoyed one afternoon by some boys following him and jeering and scoffing at him, and especially when his hat blew off, calling out to him: "Go it, Broadbrim! Limber up and you'll retch it yet!" The friend noticed another day coming down the street, and said: "Hoa, is there Pennsylvania?" "You bet." "Then (handing him a quarter) cuss those boys two shillings' worth."

A CHUNKEES man threw a coil of rope about the neck of R. C. Whiting at the Warsaw (N. Y.) driving park, the rope being attached to a balloon about to make an ascension. Before it could be removed, the word was given, and up went the balloon, Mr. Whiting being in close but unwilling pursuit. The rope holding him by the neck. He was lifted about six feet from the ground, when the ropes were caught and he released. He was not much injured, but the skin of his neck was considerably abraded.

The Chicago Tribune, Independent Republican organ, says: "The Democratic party has come to the front victorious. —The little schooner Fair Play, which came in Wednesday, reported seeing two men on Little Island, who had the appearance of having been wrecked there. The Sutton lowe being out in the sloop Little Frank, it was thought by many that they had been stranded there. A volunteer crew was picked up, and Capt. Hancock Kinch took the tug Minnie Warner out, but as they reached there, they found two Indians on the island, with a "Mackinaw" boat pulled out under the lee. The Indians said to come aboard the tug.

The Scare.—The oldest inhabitant seems to be trying to remember when he has ever used such a "spell of weather" as we have been enjoying for the past few days. For the seven entire days snow has fallen, and as we write it still snows. The snow is fully 18 in. deep on a level, with good prospects for four very soon. Saturday, 20th, as was predicted by the signal service, a west wind of terrific fury commenced, and continued until Sunday night. The wind was cold and cutting, and full of snow, making it impossible to face it any considerable distance. The roads are full, and fences covered. Charlevoix will not be favored by visits from her country cousins until shovels are freely used.

Fraser's plurality over Waddell and Nixon, 870. Majority over Waddell, 831.

County Canvass.

The following is a tabular statement of the vote cast in Charlevoix county at the recent general election:

Joaquin Miller Is Wall Street—A Poet as a Speculator.

Last spring I received a letter from the editor of the chief London magazine asking me to write him an article to be entitled "A Week in Wall Street."

I knew nothing whatever of Wall Street then. I resolved, however, to oblige my friend. I went into Wall Street at once to get the desired information and experience.

This was in genuine haste. I have just got back. I have not yet written a line of that article. But I have materials enough to write a book bigger than Macaulay's "History of England." I know all I want to know about Wall Street. And, if you will pardon the digression, I may add that I am getting bald-headed.

Finding bullish interest in this great maelstrom of excitement without taking part, I, under the advice of my broker, bought a little Wabash. I bought Wabash because it was the first stock on the list which I could distinguish from the name of two hundred names. And I came to remember it because I had been born on its banks, at the mouth of a creek on the very banks of the Wabash River. I have seen my father furrow the field for corn in the spring, while my mother followed after, dropping the corn in the furrow, while three little boys toddled after, myself of the number, and covered the grain that lay in the little square of the mellow earth. And so it was with a touch of tenderness that I bought Wabash and became one of the eager party looking up to the tape, watching, writing the turn of fortune's wheel.

She did not betray me. My stock began to move upward from the first. It was a dull row. How interesting it all was! I called the click of the "ticker" a cricket, and hated the click of the nation. If the land was healthy and prosperous, the pulse would be strong and regular, the skin was throatened with drouth, short crops, or misfortune of any kind, the pulse was low, fever, or and dull. It was like a poem.

I had now an interest in the prosperity of the land beyond a sentiment. It was a part owner in the nine hundred thousand miles of railways in America. From that day forth I studied the geography of my country as never before. My little interest in the fourth or fifth story was lined with maps of American railways. I took a fresh and joyful pride in the opening or closing prices of half the stock on the list.

How patiently I sat on to the tape along with the other timid and hopeful little lambs! We would watch the bellows, encourage each other and lay by greatplans for the future. We became very neighborly, and took kind counsel that "Hicker," and when of our set lost money he had our hearty sympathy. They were pleasant days, these first, for stocks went up steadily. I don't mention it lest, when I record how I had best expected it, I was to make a fortune without the care or risks I am perfectly certain that in those few weeks I grew to be a better man.

At last I closed out. I had in my hand more than ten thousand dollars. I had not invested so many hundreds. What scribe had ever been so fortunate! Hundreds, indeed! I never dreamed of it; they would never stop going up.

I sat down and tried for days to decide what to do. Idly, deliberately, still after as much and as mature thought as I am capable of, I went back to Wall Street with my money. I had no use for ten thousand dollars. I had great use for fifty thousand. I hug myself in satisfaction now, to remember that I thought once or twice of myself as of my friends at this time. I could get on with that sum well. But away out on the great, gold shore of the vast west sea I wanted to build a home—a city. I would gather about me the best spirits of old. In some sweet spot where there were woods and cool waters, a warm sun and prolific soil, we would meet and build a city—a city of refuge—where every Bohemian might come and have a home, rest, peace, plenty, so long as he or she should live or care to stay. I saw there on a plain of my city and framed a few brief laws for its government. I named it Utopia.

On returning to Wall Street I chose three different brokers one a "bull's" house, one a "bear" house and one a "conservative" house. By this I hoped to get all sorts of points from them.

With my "bears" I said: St. Paul short. There was talk of runs, grasshoppers, rains, floods. St. Paul would tumble to the center. It had already advanced from eighteen to sixty-nine. I sold at sixty-six, seventy and seventy-one.

With the "bulls" I bought Pacific Mail. No danger of grasshoppers on Pacific Mail. Crops, no floods or rust? Pacific Mail invitation from sixty-two and would surely go back up to eighty. I bought Pacific Mail and sat down to wait for it to go up and St. Paul to go down.

Things began to move my way. I began to work vigorously on the plans for my city. I had arranged to bring my dear old parents away from the far West while at Oregon, where they had dwelt for a quarter of a century. They had never seen the great city. Now they should see it. I hear that mighty preachers and sail on the Atlantic.

How life widened out! I had an interest now in every ship that sailed. The flow of money to or from the land was to me of vital concern. All commerce was as rich with interest to me now as the poetry of Homer. At late o'clock sharp I found myself holding on to the tape, waiting to see if I had grown richer or poorer through the night. All day, I'll the hammer fell, I stood with my finger on the pulse of commerce.

How did I come out? Oh Well, I was above all St. Paul and long of Pacific Mail. I expected Pacific Mail to go up and St. Paul to go down. They did and I had got out. But that was not enough to build a city with. I held on.

One day it was rumored that the rust was not so bad in St. Paul after all. It began to start up! Pacific Mail began to stand down. It was said the Chinese had established an opposition line. I felt you it takes a big man to sit on two benches at a time. Ten to one he will spill himself between the two just as sure as he attempts it.

I sold some St. Paul and bought more Pacific Mail; but all to no purpose. They went right on. Then I got out of Pacific Mail at the lowest figure it touched, and bought Wabash. I began to founder and got frightened. I sold and bought, and bought and sold. I frequently saw in the papers that I was getting rich in Wall Street, and was also working like a beaver. The end was only a question of time.

One day my broker took me by the sleeve, and led me like a lamb as I was, aside. My fun was over. All Utopia is indeed Utopia.

No one with so little money ever entered Wall Street under better advantages. All men were kind and good. I think no man there ever attempted to mislead me. But it is simply impossible to make money there and keep it. Let me mention here that during my six months there I paid my brokers in commissions eleven thousand four hundred and twenty-five dollars. These commissions alone will forever bar possible results.

Of course, it is not a pleasant thing to admit one's self beaten. But if this brief history of my venture in this dangerous land will dissuade at all that famished and exotic army of tape-holders who waste their shekels, their days and their strength in vain waiting, why, I willingly bear the reproach.

And, after all, I lost but little, having but little to lose. And I learned so much, having so much to learn.—The Californian.

The Joy on the Farm.

Our homestead farm was one of the best in New York State, located on an eminence commanding views of great beauty, surrounded by friendly and intelligent neighbors, adjacent to attractive villages, churches and schools. My father possessed liberal views of life and we all indulged in many innocent amusements, free of debt and with something in the bank. My brothers and sisters were given opportunities for recreation, education and private enterprise. While yet a lad I became interested in the wool sheep during which term, prices ruling high, I cleared over $2,000 above all farm or personal expenditures. Notwithstanding such favorable circumstances, often cited as a recipe for making boys "smart," none of my father's children continued farming. With a few exceptions of those owning the homestead, I left it, served an apprenticeship and for the most part was a banker in a city. There I learned how easily fortunes are made and how easily lost. I learned the value of good reputation and of the refreshing sleep of him who labors under the open sky. I learned the unsatisfactoriness, who the waves of the panic shook my bark, and the sea was strewn with wrecks, that the farm was a safe harbor and I longed to cast anchor again in that quiet retreat, remembering only the pleasant chapters of my farm life. Do I then regret having left the old home? Never! Sorry for there discontent would have relaxed my energies. No, for I cannot but believe that I am a stronger man than I could have been had I remained. The patriotism and manly development of the boys on the farm is this: Many of them were designed by Almighty for mechanics, inventors, lawyers, doctors, clergymen, etc.

What a wonderful provision that all are not born for our benefit! What confusion and suffering would result were it otherwise! Knowing well the characteristics of my brothers and schoolmates, we did not "cash in to the farm." I can confident they would have made poor farmers, whereas in their proper spheres they were successful. Therefore I dispute the popular theory that we are overcrowding agriculture by leaving those boys to remain farmers whose natural inclinations would lead them into other pursuits. Neither can I concede that the best boys leave the farm. There is much in agriculture that may allure men of ability to pursue it, and many of our best balanced minds are thus engaged. If the brother who follows a specialty carves a more brilliant record, it is in part for the reason that he bears continuously in the same channel, like the tireless Niagara. A man struggling for success in a field wholly unsuited to his tastes and natural endowment is pitiable and often ridiculous. Who would thrust a child into such bondage? The discovery of your proper place in life being half the battle let us make farm homes attractive to the boys, but for a saving purpose than to cause them to remain against their better judgment. There is no happier, more independent class on earth than the yeomanry of the world are overflowing. There is room, however, for a few more Fultons, Morses, Dawsons, Websters and Lincolns. My experience with firm and city life teaches the wisdom of giving the boy on the farm opportunities for travel and thorough education. If then he chooses farm life he will make the better farmer and more useful and honored citizen.—Chas. A. Gracie, in N. Y. Tribune.

A Pleasant Manner.

It is a pleasure to oblige really agreeable persons. Some gentlemen have an organized that it is only with deficiency they can even force the appearance of politeness, without intending it, their manner is repellant, and if they have a desire to be obliging, seem ungenial to such an extent as to invite their society unsought and disagreeable as they appear. Others are ungracefully, and great them in such a manner as makes the recipient regret having asked them, but the most naturally agreeable person both accepts and confers a favor in a manner delightful to witness.

—Joseph Hopkinson wrote "Hail Columbia" in 1798. At that time the war between England and France was at its height, and it was believed that the United States would have to take up arms against one or the other. Congress was in session at Philadelphia. The people were divided. Some favoring an alliance with France and some with England. One Saturday afternoon a young Philadelphia actor named Hopkinson called and that he was to have a benefit on the following Monday night, but that no boxes had been taken and he feared that he would lose instead of gain by the benefit. The actor thought that he could fill the house if he could get a patriotic song to the tune of the "President's March." He asked Hopkinson to write him one. Hopkinson promised to try and the result was "Hail Columbia." The song was ready on the benefit night and soon it gained immense popularity.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A train on the Memphis & Charleston Railroad was stopped the other day by a large alligator, which had lain down on the track. The animal was killed by the engine, and the train proceeded.

—Among the gifts displayed at a San Francisco wedding are the bride's father's check for $100,000. The cashier of the bank on which the check was drawn was a guest. It was observed that he looked merrily at the check, as he turned the bills some and remarked: "Why, he hasn't $500 to his credit in our bank!"

—Among the amusements in preparation for those wintering in Algiers this season is a great fox hunt, under the direction of the celebrated Rousboureel, and the only fear of the hunt is that it may be the death of fox. So scarce have foxes become throughout Algeria that a company was lately formed at Rouen for the purpose of lion rearing.

—J. Harvey Reed, the senior member of a large Boston insurance firm, suffered terrible pain during illness, and developed a desire to be relieved by death. Everything that could be used as a weapon was put out of his reach, and he was closely watched. The window of his third-story room was fastened down as an additional precaution, but he baffled all these measures by throwing himself through the window sash.

—One of the most amusing objects seen upon promenade Paris is the dome of the Hotel des Invalides which glows in the sunshine like a ball of gold. During Napoleon's reign, when it was reported to him that an admiral, lieutenant general or marshal of France was guilty of any grave misconduct, he was ordered to gild the dome of the Invalides. It was generally considered a very severe punishment, but Duroc was the only one of the generals of the Empire who ever complained of the commemorative labor of their hands. At the present moment this tendency to gild the dome of the Invalides is manifest in a straining after a supposed gentility would be truly pitiable, if the process of time it has attained did not awaken more serious apprehensions. It is an affectation confined to the country alone, but it is known, too, in the great cities of the States, of Germany and France.—Prof. Sylvester B. Thompson, in Popular Science Monthly.

Story of a Somnambulist.

A citizen of North Turner Bridge, a village in Maine, was aroused the other night by his wife telling him a neighbor's house was on fire, and begging him to go and help put it out. He went out and looked, and did not see anything. Returning fire depart service, then came home and returned to bed. The next morning he remarked to his wife: "I feel dreadfully. I am lame and feel completely exhausted." "Well you may," said the wife, "after working so hard at the fire all night." "What do you mean?" said he. "Why, the Stanford house was burned last night, and you worked like a beaver carrying the other buildings." He seemed surprised to hear it, went out and took a look over the premises and came back. "Well, Marcia, the buildings are surely gone, but it never would have entered even you when you say that I went to that fire, if they were to get me. I don't know a thing about it." It turned out that he was in a state of somnambulism all the time of his brave action the night before.

Education as a Hindrance to Manual Labor.

Now, what will be the verdict of future generations on learning that the education which has grown apace since the fall Nation offers to the children of its artisans, to the class that will form the majority of the next generation, is not a character purely literary, in no sense technical or even scientific? It is an education which, so far as it goes beyond the three elements of reading, writing and arithmetic, is framed in its essential features upon an exclusive ly collegiate type, and includes grammar, history, geography, foreign languages, and the like, being introduced, to the utter exclusion in all the most important of the successive "Standards" of any teaching of mechanics, of the simplest facts of science or of natural history—of all, in fact, that most surely concerns the artisan throughout his entire career. In all the constructive faculties, in the exercise of workman's instincts are given to him in the form of working drawings. Yet we suffer the building artisan to pass through the schools ignorant of the first rudiments of a science that is as essential to his work as are the four rules of arithmetic. And ought we, then, to be surprised if, in the balance of the system we have deliberately marked out for the rising generation, we keep our future artisans, till they are fifteen or sixteen, employed in no other work than sitting at a desk to follow, pen in hand, the literary courses of studies of our educational code, we discover that arriving at that age they have lost the taste for manual work, and prefer to serve on a threadpaper pittance as clerks or book-keepers rather than by the long-existing and well remunerative labor of their hands? At the present moment this tendency to draw off the best boys from the workshop in straining after a supposed gentility would be truly pitiable, if the process of time it has attained did not awaken more serious apprehensions. It is an affectation confined to the country alone, but it is known, too, in the great cities of the States, of Germany and France.—Prof. Sylvester B. Thompson, in Popular Science Monthly.

For Young Readers.

THIRTEEN YEARS OLD.

Oh baby, dear baby, I'm thirteen today,
And I'm going to be a stenographer my style!
I'm going to be a typewriter by and by!
I'm going to be a business woman, I'm going to be a business woman, I'm going to be a business woman for a dollar—not even for you.

Almost a young lady, I'll soon wear a train
And do up my hair, and I'll soon be a queen.
I'll study and study and study and study,
And I'll learn and learn and learn and learn,
And I'll always look as good as I do now.
I always looks as good as I do now.

I'll bring out your dresses, so pretty and gay,
And look them all smilingly and just then
They will not be worn by me, but by you.

Then sometimes in misery, with rash and pain,
You'll come
Ah, I was happy while making your clothes,
And it is a happy while making your clothes,
And I'll always make you clothes as smart,
And you'll always look as smart.

And now for your trunks, I will lay them all
Oh, baby, baby, how sad I regret
How sad I am to leave you! I'll think of you eighty
We traveled together so much, you and I!
Whatever the fashion and the garb we wore
We always were dressed the same.

Now here is your cradle, with things all in it,
Your basket, your bottle—I know what I'll do!
I'll leave them for baby, for baby, for baby,
Yes, I can't give you up! You'll be
Baby Norton, to Mr. Norbeck.

POLLY AND THE BEAR.

In the first place, Poll Pitcher was very busy with her doll and didn't want to go. You see her manners was in the middle of a tea party, and she was just making some slippery candy and needed more water, but Polly ran there very quickly, and when she went away the kettle was almost empty and needed more water, but Polly ran there very fast as a squirrel in Napoleon's knowledge of French character.

The Dartwell family moved into a small but comfortable house at Medford, Mass., and did not manifest any desire to be neighborly, though they were polite enough to those who called. Carlotta was excited by the fact that the boy pretty but pale and sat face of a little girl was sometimes seen at the garret window. Her wistful expression whenever she saw children at play led to a belief that she was a prisoner. This went on for several months. Then an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children went to the house and asked permission to investigate. He was assured that no child was within; but he insisted on a search, and in the garret found the girl. Inquiry showed utterly neglected child of seven. She was half clothed in rags and a pile of gnawed bones in a corner was another. Polly couldn't see the spring anywhere, but it poured out in a stream. The room was no larger than a closet, and she nearly was lost and didn't know it.

And so these little feet carried that poor little girl around till they came to Polly Pitcher, who was at the foot of a tree and cried for much as three minutes. What's the matter?

"My goodness gracious me! What's the matter?"

Polly stopped crying and looked up, and there she saw a tremendous black bear right in front of her. He was on his hind legs, you know, but he smiled very kindly. Polly wasn't at all afraid.

"What did you get, Mr. Bear?" she asked.

I said Goodness gracious me, and what's the matter," replied the bear, taking of his spectacles and wiping them on his pocket handkerchief, which he carried around his neck.

"I'll tell you," said Polly.

"Excuse me," said the bear.

"But I am really and truly."

"My goodness gracious me," said the bear, "you're not lost, for here you are, right here."

"Well, my mamma's lost anyway."

"That may be," said the bear; "shall we go and find her?"

"Are you a good, kind bear, like the little one with the flute and the one with the little cane and the little fool in Silver Locks?" asked Polly.

"I'll show you whether I am or not," said the big black bear, and what do you think he did? He tumbled down on all fours and began to dig away the leaves at the foot of the tree in the most furious manner.

And then out to call on the turkeys and chicks.

Now here is your cradle, with things all in it,
Your basket, your bottle—I know what I'll do!
I'll leave them for baby, for baby, for baby,
Yes, I can't give you up! You'll be
Baby Norton, to Mr. Norbeck.

"What are you doing?" she asked, but the bear kept right on and didn't say a word. By and by he stopped and looked at second.

"Do you see any of my little bears about here?" he whispered, "because I don't want them to know where I am."

Polly looked all around but did not see a thing, so she just kept kept on, and when he had made a hole in the ground as big as a pumpkin he pulled down a little cardboard box with tissue paper scallops all around the edges.

"There ought to be a little honey in it," said the bear; just open the box and see."

"Is there is," cried Polly, but I don't like to take the very last one."

"My goodness gracious me, there are lots more. Don't you see those little sticks stuck in the ground? Well, there's a bee with a gunslingo in it under every one of them. I have to put them round, you know, to keep them away from the little bears. They only have them on their birthdays."

"How many have you got?" asked Polly.

The bear counted to himself on his paws. "Oh, about three dozen."

"And this one's yours?" said Polly.

"I don't mean bears, I mean gunslingo," said the big bear; "gunslingo is what they call sweet words in years ago, because I thought they might go up."

"That's all right," said Polly, "but I must find my mamma, and I'm most crying again."

"I will tell you what I will do," said the bear, "if you will sing me a song I will carry you all the way home."

So Polly sang:

"Little drops of water, Little grains of sand,"

three or four times, and then the big bear lifted her up on his shoulders, and after she had put her arms around his neck they started off.

Mexican Railroad Projects.

President Diaz has signed contracts with two American companies for international lines, one to the City of Mexico and the other with branches to the Pacific, but Congressional action is still needed to validate either or both.

The contracts were signed by President Diaz under the act of June 1, 1880, whereby the Mexican Congress empowered the Executive to grant definite charters for railway construction. The scheme of the system embraces, first, the completion of an interoceanic line from the Gulf of Mexico across the central portion of the country from Vera Cruz, via the Capital City of Mexico, to the Pacific coast; and second, an international line opening the channels of commerce by rail communication between that country and the United States. The completion to which the concessions have been made are the Mexican Central and Company, a corporation organized under a charter from the State of Massachusetts, and the National Railway Company, which the Company a corporation made up of the South-Eastern States, which has for its object the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad. The stockholders of the Mexican Central Company are capitalists of Boston, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Hartford and Cincinnati. Thomas Nickerson, of Boston, is President. He is now the President of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Road. Mr. Rudolph Fink, who is a younger brother of Postmaster Albert Fink, of the Southern Railway Company, Manager of the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad, has been appointed General Manager of the Mexican Central, and will assume charge of the work of construction by the engineer City of Washington as Vera Cruz.

The Mexican Central Company has been granted the right to build a road from the commencing its line of road from the City of Leon, a distance of 262 miles. Until the new law was promulgated this line was the extent to which the Company had a right to build. The work is now well forward. About thirty-five miles, from Selva to Salamanca, are in operation, and the section extending from the City of Leon southward over about thirty-seven miles is expected to be opened about November 1. To connect at El Paso with the present line in the State of Chihuahua, west of the Rio Grande. Thence northward to the City of Leon, a distance of 262 miles. Until the new law was promulgated this line was the extent to which the Company had a right to build. The work is now well forward. About thirty-five miles, from Selva to Salamanca, are in operation, and the section extending from the City of Leon southward over about thirty-seven miles is expected to be opened about November 1. To connect at El Paso with the present line in the State of Chihuahua, west of the Rio Grande. Thence northward to the Presidency, and every effort is being made to have the road in operation and formal inauguration by him before that date.

The new concessions gives the Mexican Central Company the right to extend its line from the City of Mexico northward to the Rio Grande frontier of the State of Texas, and to connect with New Mexico, where it will meet the Atlantic and Pacific & Santa Fe Railroad, the Southern Pacific of California, the Texas Pacific, the Missouri Pacific, Harrisburg & San Antonio, and the Sonora Railway now being constructed from the Pacific coast, and also to the Mexican State of the same name on the Gulf of California. The concessions are also authorized by this law to construct a line to the Port of Mazatlan on the Pacific coast, from any point on the line of the Mexican Central Railway, and to the Port of Guaymas in the Mexican State of the same name on the Gulf of California. The company is also authorized by this law to construct a line from the City of Mexico to the Port of Manzanillo, on the Pacific Coast, in the State of Colima, from any convenient point on its line from the City of Mexico to the cities of Leon and Aguas Calientes, passing through the city of Guadalajara, and to construct such railroads thus authorized is estimated to be about 1,000 miles. The mountain region of Mexico extend the length of the country north and south. The northern line will traverse the States of Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, and Sonora, because the line will be narrow gage, only to the extent of four per cent. thereof.—N. Y. World.

—An elephant is used in a spectacular play in Philadelphia. He is kept in a stable several blocks away and takes to the theater every evening at the proper point in the piece. One afternoon he took it into his head that the time had come to perform. Throwing his keeper aside, he burst into the street, overturned a wagon and several street stands on his way to the theater, smashed a door and took his usual place on the stage. The absence of lights and audience seemed to confuse him a that he had made a mistake, for he refused himself to be led back to the stable.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A poultice of fresh tea leaves moistened with water, will cure aches on the eyelid.

—Care the soot that falls from the chimneys. A pint of soot to a pailful of water will make a liquid manure of the greatest value for flowers and plants of all kinds.

—It is now time for all farmers to prune out the herds of stock on the farm of all scalawags or old and worthless animals. Old or poor milk cows should be quickly prepared for beef. Poor breeders of all kinds of stock should be disposed of at once.

—Carrot Cake.—One cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cup of English currants, mill them in flour; one and one-half cups of flour.

—Potato Pudding.—One pound potatoes boiled and well-washed, salted; one-fourth pound of butter stirred in while warm, two ounces sugar, rind of half a lemon chopped fine, with the juice, two teaspoonfuls of milk and four eggs; butter the tins, put in mixture and bake in a moderate oven half an hour.

—A man at Northfield, Mass., one who has been trying all the experiments in his orchard, says that to cure pear trees of the yellows the best remedy is to pour boiling hot water over the limbs and body of the trees affected with the disease, the water to be applied in the spring, summer and autumn It will cure all the limbs.

—CEMENT FOR BOOK.—A cement for cash-iron ware is made of five parts of iron filings and two of flour of sulphur mixed into a paste with linseed oil. When this becomes hard it resists heat and moisture, and cracks on a stove unless it has been built by means of a plate of iron. Powdered litharge mixed with red lead causes the cement to erase.

—Rising Flies.—Take a pound of beef free from skin and bone and chop it very fine; then put pounds of suet, which pounds of currants, finely cleansed and perfectly dry, one pound and a half of apples, the peel and juice of one lemon, half a pint of wine either, half a nutmeg grated and a few cloves and mace, with pimento in fine powder. Have ready a good crust, roll out and put some in each of the pies when made.

—Famous Indian Bread.—Scald two cupfuls of sifted corn meal, mix alternately with them one pint of sour milk or buttermilk and one cupful of sifted rye meal; melt one tablespoonful of butter and add to the mixture; dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in one tablespoonful of water, stir in a small portion of the milk and add to the mixture with the rest; beat very hard and bake in a quick oven.

—Yorkshire Pudding.—Put six large tablespoonfuls of flour into a basin with a salt spoon of salt, and stir gradually into this enough milk to make a thick batter. When this is perfectly smooth add about a pint of milk and continue to stir until the batter is perfectly free. Beat two eggs very light, yolks and whites together, then beat in two cups of white sugar granulated preferred—then one cup of sifted flour, a little at a time, then another cup of flour with another teaspoonful of baking powder have been mixed; lastly, a small cupful of tea, almost cold, to which not put it all in at once, but stir in a little at a time. When making this cake the time must be certain to put in a little more flour, the dough is so thin; do not bake in a deep tin, but in a broad one. Bake in a moderately hot oven.

Balky Horses.

A correspondent of the Rural writes: Many and varied have been the plans, both kind and harsh, tried for the cure of balkiness in horses, by parties troubled, delayed and provoked in this way. Having had considerable experience in the handling of such horses, I have found the following a good remedy. It is easily and quickly applied, and does not injure the horse any. Save, indeed, to cure.

Two persons are required for the trial. One should hold the reins while the other fastens a short strap or rope —a leather strap is always at hand—so as to secure the horse's left foot, continuing to pull, the foot will be drawn back and held down a little in advance of the other. The horse will then move forward to gain his equilibrium. Another pull will cause the right foot to be moved up and be repeated several times, or until the horse moves without having the foot pulled forward. Usually the first or second pull will start him. Three or four such attempts are about as well as he will work. When the start is made it is generally an easy one. Sometimes, however, a sudden appearance of the horse being in a hurry to get away from the pursuing man with the strap, therefore a steady hand should manage the reins. I have never known a horse under the treatment provided in the case of the Mexican Central Company, and because the line is to be narrow gage, only to the extent of four per cent. thereof.—*N. Y. —An elephant is used in a spectacular play in Philadelphia. He is kept in a stable several blocks away and takes to the theater every evening at the proper point in the piece. One afternoon he took it into his head that the time had come to perform. Throwing his keeper aside, he burst into the street, overturned a wagon and several street stands on his way to the theater, smashed a door and took his usual place on the stage. The absence of lights and audience seemed to confuse him a that he had made a mistake, for he refused himself to be led back to the stable.

Beegum, or "Broken Bone Fever."

DESIRE, or broken-bone fever, also known as "dandy fever," "bucket fever," and "beequiet fever," is said to have made its first appearance as a malady in the West Indies in 1827, at which time it was also communicated to the southern parts of the United States. The disease, as has previously been stated, received the name "Dengue" from the Spaniards of the West India Islands, from their word dengue, signifying finikery, which expresses stiffness—a pain in the bones and stiffness of the body being the principal features of the sickening disease.

During the past few months reports have come from every quarter in the Southern States regarding the prevalence of this troublesome but not necessarily fatal disease. But few, if any, deaths have been made known from its effects. Nearly every citizen of Savannah has had a touch—some light, some severe—of the malady, and most of them can give a definite explanation of the cause of the disease. It has been the tortures of the disease. It has been the tortures of the disease. Children, little ones, large men, black men, white men, colored men, females even, sporting men, printers, editors, lawyers, every one being subject to its fearful torture.

As for a cure or a preventive for the little nuisance, we are not prepared to say what is the best. Each one has his or her case, but leave the matter to the physicians, who, by the way, have been reaping a rich harvest from the unlucky victims of the disease. Some persons have gone so far as to say that the fever is more violent on those who have before it before. Light, or heavy, or medium we do not know. We can only say, however, that any one, sooner or later, who has not had the fever, does not wish a second bathe in which to show better fight. Probably it is the above mentioned fever than anything else—this is, in severity on those who have had it before. Well, we say farewell.—Savannah News.

CAKE TO BE EATEN WARM FOR TEA.—Sift two pounds of baking powder in one pound of fine flour. Rub in a quarter of a pound of butter, half a pound of clarified dripping, mix in a quarter of a pound granulated sugar, a tea spoonful of powdered cinnamon, ditto of powdered ginger, ditto of mixed spice, ditto of grated lemon peel, or any other flavoring. When ready to bake, stir in quickly between two well-beaten eggs mixed with a gill and a half of milk, or still enough to have the mass of the right buttered tin, and bake in a hot oven.

"I BELIEVE, after all," exclaimed Peterjohn impatiently, "that a man is born a fool as sure as he is born a fool of himself." "I must needs respect your opinion," replied Wiseman. "And great Scott! now you must have enjoyed yourself through life, Peterjohn."—Boston Transcript.

Singular Case of Hydrophobia.

A LATE Providence (R. I.) special to the New York Sun says: Last Monday a little son of James Molyneaux, of this city, was taken down with symptoms of hydrophobia. On Tuesday the disease was clearly defined. The child is nine years old, and has been biting at nearly as his parents could learn, some three weeks before by a cur on the street. All of the symptoms of hydrophobia set in. In the convulsions produced the choking sensation is sometimes likened to the snapping of a dog, and there was the attendant foaming at the mouth. While his father and mother were reading him on his them both, and a feeling impressed him to care for him. He was sent to the Rhode Island Hospital.

Last evening Mr. Molyneaux, the mother, without the slightest premonition excepting a feeling of lassitude, was suddenly convulsed. She was sitting at the time with some friends at her residence on Silo street. The convulsions became more violent. Nothing at the mouth and other symptoms that had been noticed in the boy were observed. It was necessary for the friends to control her. They say she appeared at them whenever the paroxysms left and that this action caused them to remember that the boy had been bitten by the little cur Henry. Mr. Molyneaux was away, and the police were hurriedly notified of the case. Immediately entered the room and approached the bed on which she was lying. Instead of the fierce spit from her eyes, as the things on Chase on the counterfeit there will be observed the same appearance as in the boy's case. Then the bloom on the counterfeit, which is unnoticeable on the genuine, is also found on the counterfeit. Then the two ovals in the upper left-hand corner of the face, measuring from the extreme point of the nose, are found on the counterfeit, but not on the genuine. The Counterfeit Bonds.

WASHINGTON, November 4.

The following has been issued from the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 1, 1880.

—Capt. F. D. Nesbitt has subsequently had a prosperous season's harbor. The Jim Gem has made 40 trips the same season, when she was bought, and has carried 300 cords of bark and 700 cords of wood. The Flamborg has made fifteen trips to Milwaukee, and carried 600 cords of bark and 240 of wood.

At the mouth of the piers the Payne returned but Capt. Hammell, of the Mason, bravely kept on his way through the blinding storm, and found the vessel, the Flaherty. Well understanding definitely he found the piers and brought the vessel safely into the harbor.

It proved to be the schooner Sea Gem. She passed the Mansion nearly that morning, and from there kept South until she had sufficient offing to round the outer pier-head. Chauncy Barnum publicly denies having had a hand in the Morey Chinese cheap labor letter forgery. The public is not prepared to accept Barnum's denial. He and his co-conspirators of the Stalwart Committee, having every reason to know that the letter was a forgery at the very outset, nevertheless had it lithographed and copies of it sent broadcast all over the country, thus stamping the fraud with their indorsement. It was a mean and disreputable piece of business, and places Barnum on a par with the rascal who actually committed the forgery. The probability is that, notwithstanding his denial, he knew all about the forgery, and in all was committed with his knowledge and approval.

The sums of moneys and postal cards for October was the largest in the history of the Government, amounting to [illegible] 1881.

Ex-Senator Conkling's initial payment to his daughter at her request with U. S. Grant, Jr., was $100,000 in Government four per cents.

The office of the Utica Morning Herald-Tribune has the record of the largest sworn circulation of any newspaper in the country. Thirty-one thousand copies are sworn to as a regular issue.

There will be three "lame ducks" in the next Congress, namely: Orsamus Cobb, of New York; J. Hoge Ewing, of Illinois; Conkling, of Dorsheimer, and M. Hale, of this State.

The Democratic members of Congress from Louisiana congratulate Garfield on his election, as the result relieves them of the necessity to vote the polls in unsafe Republican districts.

The present Congress will reconvene for its last session on Monday, December 5. The new Congress will not have much a time from that time unless called together in extra session.

The Lexington (Ky.) Gazette says: "It is of no use for the Democrats to try to compromise to please the Mahone people. They are bad. The party did not elect Cleveland, and that is the long and short of it.

The Chicago Tribune claims that the opposition to myself to Hon. Garfield's Cabinet appointments. If you would like to see Grant Secretary of War, just say so on a postal card to the Inter Ocean.

General Grant informed Mr. Horace White, of Syracuse, N. Y. recently, while the former was a guest at the latter's house, that he had entirely abandoned both the use of wine and stimulants for two years.

Fifteen candidates for Congress will probably follow the next House the name of ex-governors who were counted in, and came in a fair prospect that several of the contestants will be counted, so farmland were the fourth that "carried" none of the districts, predominantly in the South.

The Presidential electors who were chosen at the polls on election will meet, at their several State capitols and cast their votes for President and Vice President on the 2nd Wednesday in December. Congress is directed by law to open and count those votes on the second Wednesday in February, and to declare the result.

General Garfield will enter upon the duties of the high office with the most thorough preparation and the most unanimous mandate of any man who was ever called to the chair. He has been almost an army and a candidate almost before, and the campaign of slander has but rendered him the more to the hearts of the people.

The Boston Traveler says: "It has transpired that if having come to the end of some Republicans in New York that General Garfield was discussing for money to meet the increased demands for hospitality, for telegraphing and for traveling a purse of some $4000 was quietly made up for him, and he was presented with it without knowing the source from whence it came."

One of the veterans of the war, who lost a leg, was urged at the polls in Maine to vote for Hancock. "Well," said he, "I could'n't do it. I had a dream last night. I dreamed I went to the polls and deposited a Hancock ballot, and just as I did so I looked around, and there was my old leg, which was buried nearly twenty years ago, just as lively as a cricket, pinching me as I deserved. No sir, no Hancock vote for me.

General Garfield's Congressional District—the 19th Ohio—gave him 13,255 majority over Hancock, which is the largest majority ever given to any candidate for any office in that region. One year ago, Gov. Foster's majority in the same district was 10,149. Republican gain in one year, 3,106, in one Congressional district. Where are the Hancockers who were praising about Gen. Garfield's constituents repudiating him?

The Silk Industry in America.

To most of the residents of the present century, who have not visited Europe, it would be a novel sight to see a whole village engaged in the manufacture of silk, and yet there are many villages in this country where nearly every family is engaged in the production of silk goods. Such a village is Mansfield, Conn., where the Willimantic Linen Company has its mills. Here are also the mills of the Willimantic Thread Company, which is the largest concern of the kind in the world. Here are made the spool silks and sewing silks which are sold in every part of the world. But there are also many other articles manufactured in Mansfield, and the industry is carried on in almost every house in the village. Here are made the fine dress silks, the ribbons, the velvets, the plushes, the satins, the linings, the handkerchiefs, the scarfs, the neckties, the veils, the fringes, the tassels and dozens of other articles. Here also is made the sewing silk which is used in the sewing machines of the Singer Manufacturing Company, which has a large factory in the village. The fur which is used in the manufacture of the Dunlap hats is also made here, and the Dunlap Company has a large factory in the village. Here also are made the silk goods which are used in the manufacture of the Gossamer rubber garments. Here are made the silk goods which are used in the manufacture of the Crompton corsets, and here are made the silk goods which are used in the manufacture of the Warner corsets. The Democratic Party Without a Future and Without a Hope.

The Boston Commercial Bulletin thus shows that there is no encouragement for any Democratic party man anywhere to expect success in 1888 this year's crop of corn is enormous:

The Mercy Letter. Judge Davis' Opinion—Philip Held to Bail.

On the 19th Chief Justice Noah Davis, of the Criminal Court, rendered his decision upon the following opinion in the case of Reynard Philip, charged with criminally assaulting Mary Ann Cotter:

In my opinion the prisoner's counsel cannot be allowed to withdraw the plea of guilty which he entered on the arraignment of the prisoner. The prisoner has been indicted for a felony, and has pleaded guilty to the indictment. Under the statute of this State, which was passed in 1862, and which has been in force ever since, the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of the plea of guilty, and the Court is required to pronounce sentence upon him. The statute is mandatory, and I have no discretion in the matter. The prisoner is entitled to the benefit of the plea of guilty, and I am

THE U. S. SENATORSHIP.

The Legislature will be called upon in January to elect a U. S. Senator. Three will be from candidates, Omar D. Conger, M. C. from the Seventh District, Ex-Gov. John J. Bagley and the present Senator, and Ex-Gov. Henry P. Baldwin. Complimentary votes may also be given to Hon Jay A. Hubbell, M. C. from this District.

There are many reasons why we desire to see Dickson, John J. Bagley elected to the position. He is pre-eminently a representative Michigan man, who has come from obscure childhood to be one of the first citizens of Michigan by his own exertions, assisted by a life of private and political rectitude.

There have been opportunities for Gov. Bagley to show his deep interest in Michigan's welfare, and his devotion to our two peninsula has been conspicuous. More particularly has he always championed the interests of the farming and working classes, against the aristocracy and grand corporations. The memorable connection with the question of cession of railroad lands Bagley insure him the vote of every member who resides within the limits of railroad land grants.

Gov. Bagley is a man of large brain and mind, in politics a stalwart of the Chandler type, and would honor Michigan in the Senate of the United States.

HEWITT and Hewitt have joined the ranks of those northern whose fingers are all behind time.

It is rumored that in a speech two years ago Tilden phrophesied that the party gaining power in the election of 1880 would hold it for 20 years.

THERE have been several suggestions in southern papers that the southern states compliment Gen. Garfield with their solid and unanimous electoral vote.

THE wheat crop of the United States this year, according to to the most careful estimate, is more than 450,000,000 bushels. This will give a surplus, after supplying the home market, of nearly 200,000,000 bushels.

THERE are over a quarter of a million of recipients of pensions in the United States. Commissioner Bentley estimates that $50,000,000 will be required to pay them for the current year.

EX-SENATOR STANLEY MATTHEWS, of Ohio, who lately returned from a visit to Mentor, gives it as his opinion that President-elect Garfield will make an entire change in the cabinet, retaining none of the present members.

THE receipts of the government for customs dues, internal revenue, and public land sales for the past year were $59,871,905 greater than for the twelve months preceding. The total expenditures were but $805,054 in excess of those for the year previous.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, Democratic, says: "The Tilden letter should be a warning to Democrats. * * * The safe course for Democrats is honesty. Unfortunately that party never walks in the 'safe course.'"

Hon. John C. New and Gen. Ben Harrison are each talked of to succeed Senator McDonald from Indiana. If Gen. Harrison is called to President Garfield's Cabinet, the Governor will doubtless be elected. His State owes him a large debt of gratitude for the services rendered in the late campaign, which resulted in placing it among the galaxy of Republican States.

We still have the Senate, but we will not have it long unless we drive the financiers of the north to the rear, and keep them there. Even the control of our local affairs is endangered by the criminal blunders of the idiots, who rely on ballot-stuffing, fraud, hypocrisy, and perjury. The storm the Herald saw coming more than a year ago has burst upon us with a terrible force. Let us hope that it has done its worst, and that the political atmosphere will be purer and better for room it owns.—Vicksburg Herald.

IMMEDIATELY President-elect Garfield, the next new set of Presidents of the United States who have been members of Congress is eleven, as against nine who never began and completed a college course. These nine were: Washington, Monroe, Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, Taylor, Fillmore, Lincoln and Johnson. Gen. Grant is a graduate of West Point, and is included among the eleven. Monroe had William and Mary College to enter after the Revolutionary army, and Harrison was prevented by financial embarrassment from pursuing he full course at Hampden-Sidney College. Harvard College has given us two Presidents; William and Mary gave us Jefferson and Taylor; Princeton gave us Madison; the University of North Carolina gave us Polk; Brown gave us Pierce; Dickinson, Buchanan; Kenyon, Hayes, and Williams, Garfield.

CHALMERS, the Fort Pillow hero, has again been "elected" from the Mississippi district, which has a Republican majority of 17,000 at least. His opponent polled about 12,000 majority, but this has been thrown out, and 8,000 returned for the hero of Fort Pillow.

THE track of the Northern Pacific entered Montana territory last Thursday, and the occasion was celebrated by the driving of a spike of pure silver into a polished oak tie, furnished by citizens of Helena. The ceremony was witnessed by a number of guests of Manager Sargent, and a few speeches were made. The track is now laid nearly 200 miles west of Bismarck.

THE weather is making itself felt in a variety of ways. In Colorado last week it was extremely cold, the mercury marking 14 degrees below zero at Denver, 20 degrees below at Boulder, and 30 below at Breckenridge, up in the mountains. At Little Rock, Ark., snow fell all day on the 17th, an event unparalleled in that climate so early in the season. At St. Louis and Louisville, and at Dallas, Texas, snow also fell to a considerable depth Thursday morning the thermometer north and below zero in Nevada, Colorado, Kansas and Idaho.

THE strange assortment of subscribers to well-conducted newspapers is fully rendered by publishers. "Stop my paper" comments of dread to businesses or business men their nerves after a paper has been established for a term of years. So long as a paper pursues a just, honorable and judicious course, meeting the wants of its customers in all respects, the ties of friendship between the subscribers and the paper are as hard to break by an outside third party as the link which binds old friends in business or social life. Occasional defects and errors in a newspaper are overlooked by those who have become attached to it, through its perusal in years. They sometimes become dissatisfied with it on account of something which has slipped into its columns, and may stop taking it; but the absence of the familiar sheet at their homes and offices for a few weeks becomes an insupportable privation, and they hasten to take it again, and possibly apologize for having it stopped. No friendship on earth is more constant than that contracted by the reader of his journal which makes an honest, an earnest effort to merit its continued support. Hence is conscientiously conducted paper becomes a favorite in the family.

An Interesting Letter From Captain W. Clifford, of the 7th U. S. Infantry.

The following is a conversation I heard during the halt of a train between St. Paul and Bismark, on board of which I was a passenger, and you are welcome to it as half the usual wholesale rates:

"How old is your baby?"

"Nearly two years."

"And no teeth yet?"

"Not a tooth, nor a signal of a tooth soon."

"Bother," said a listener, "that's nothing. I've seen people eighty or ninety years old who had not a tooth to ask a blessing with, and never expected to have any."

"You think your smart, don't you?"

"Well-it-s fact. I knew an old woman once who had just one tooth right (or left, as the tactics used to say when I was a soldier) in front. When she talked the person who sat in front of her could not catch her meaning, those who sat on either side could understand just half each, and after the old woman got through they used to take the middle man out—help the wounded and tell him what the old dame had been saying. First one would tell his half, then the other would complete the story, then they would go 'cock and bull' to some more."

"She must have been an interesting talker for people to go to all that trouble."

"Well, you see, she knew all about everything in the township, and people would go to her for information. On time she was telling something to the fellow who sat in front, but he could not catch her meaning, and had no idea that the story concerned him so greatly until they took him out into the woodshed to tell him. As soon as the first one was through, he became very much excited and turned to the other man to get the rest of it; but he had been called away very suddenly. The story was about a will or I am about to something, and if the man who took out in front of the old woman could get hold of the missing paper it would make him very rich. Well they waited for the absent man, to get the rest of the story, and then started to hunt him up, but he could not be found, so they came back to the old woman to have her tell the story over again, but it seems she had forgotten all about it. She was the only person found who knew all about the missing paper, and I suppose they were all a good deal excited, but as I say, she had forgotten all about it. They kept interrogating her so frequently that finally she got mad, and, catching up the broom, drove them all out of doors, guarding that solitary man action in a manner that was perfectly frightful, they said."

"Well, the interested party went to hunting for the other man, but he had gone to Colorado or some other place in the mountains, and he has never been able to get track of him or obtain the rest of the story, and his friends think that he will have to put him in an insane asylum. He just like a novel that it?"

"Yes and yes are the greatest lies I ever heard tell. I do think you can tell more noise with, and relish a lie better than any one I ever listened to."

"Is just as true as I tell here, you don't appear to realize the importance of a full set of teeth."

"Is the biggest lie you ever told."

We were passing through one of the great wheat fields which lie between Fargo on the Red River of the North and Bismarck, the Western terminus of the Northern Pacific R. R. There are hundreds of these great farms adjacent to this road. They belong to speculators who are engaged in wheat raising purely as a speculation. But settlers are also rapidly filling up Dakota, and they come from all conditions—many from Canada. These have been induced by the Manitoba navigation monopoly to sell out their farms in Canada and move to Manitoba, but after reaching that country have become dissatisfied and moved across the line into Dakota. The meaning of the name Dakota is literally "The Confederated Tribes," or "Land of the Allied Slaves." "Grandest" would perhaps better describe this vast plain-land. But by the old musical scale of human, though its former warlike owners have been forced to yield to the progressive egg-saving white man, who is already reaping golden harvests from its Hitherto idle soil. The emigrant has "gone back on Gen. Hazen, now, instead of the long dry months with which it used to be cursed, and which induced the kindly hearted general to wage campaigns against, there is an abundance of rain, as the mighty fields of wheat can testify, and at times too much. These wonderful farms are, for better management, cut into divisions, each with its superintendant, and wheat growing has been reduced to a science, and the minimum of expense.

To the traveler passing over these great plains, they seem to be limitless, and as level as a motionless sea. The buffalo grass, which on this same ground I can remember ten years ago as growing to a height of not two or three inches, now, owing to the increased rainfall attains to eighteen or twenty inches, and once cured but lay as it cut on the uplands, when in former years it was necessary to seek it on the river bottoms.

No person who has spent a life time in the east never out of sight of timber, can form any correct idea of the magnitude of these United States. It needs a trip across the great plains. These plains and the prairies of Illinois or Iowa are quite different. The plains grass is either 'buffalo' or 'Gramia'. The first is short and curie, feeling under the foot more like wool than anything else I can liken it to. The bunch grass grows as its name indicates in bunches. These grasses spring up as soon as the snow leaves the ground and flourishes until the middle of July-say, then the rainy season is over and the hot sun and dry winds kill it as quickly that it is cured with all its juices. In the space of a week or less the vast green carpet will change to a light brown. This year after the grass had cured an usual, the rain fell so copiously that the grass sprung up anew and only doffed its coat of green when Jack Frost put in an appearance.

The only drawback in this otherwise favored land is its lack of fuel. Timber along the streams is not a prevailing feature of this territory, and for that matter the flowing streams are very few. But the inconvenience of the absence of fuel proper is in a measure overcome by the introduction of hay and straw consuming stoves.

Just think of becoming the possessor of 160 acres first class land all ready for the plow, for $14.00. A good home is not a bad affair to live in. The only lumber required is for door and window sashings and rafters. The sod is cut with a breaking plow, then into squares for the walls, and long strips for the roof. Inside the walls are plastered or lined with cheap cotton or strong canvass. When the farm will pay for it the outside is cased up and we'll last as well as any other house, is very warm in winter and delightfully cool in summer.

One of the first things the thoughtful farmer of Dakota is to tree planting, and in a very few years he is independent as far as fuel is concerned, not very many years will elapse before Dakota will rank among the richest.

Small towns are already marking the rapid growth in population along the line of the road when ten years ago not a vestage of civilization was to be seen, and where every piece of white traveled at the risk of life. The red hauled Sioux have disappeared, let us hope forever. Their outbreak in 1876 cost this country as easy how, as would an year of tedious and suffering, and ten years of advancement.

Bismarck is the present terminus of the N. P. R. R., though the rail are laid and almost ready for regular train service 100 miles further west. The town of Mandan (named after a tribe of Indians peculiar for all natural colors in hair and eyes, gray eyes, blue, black and red in hair, black, yellow, red and brown,) lies on the west bank of the Missouri nearly opposite Bismarck. Both of these towns like all frontier towns are struggling with a half fledged appearance, excessively muddy and wet, and superlatively dusty in dry weather. No-al how could get drunk a dozen times a week in either town and as hard a drinker as he is there would be a drop to spare when he got through with his spree, that is, if he ever does let up. There is no lack of work for those who are that way inclined, no lack of grub, shops and no lack of land for those who wish to locate farms.

The country is as beautiful as a rosy dreame in summer, but does not as a frost a season in winter, and woe betide the unhappy wayfarer caught in a blizzard with no shelter in sight these fearful storms count howling from the northwest over the vast plains thats treeless from the Rocky Mountains to the Red River, with nothing to break their fury, and so sudden in their onset that preparations to meet them is almost impossible. No living thing can face them when they are on, their best hunt, with the thermometer down as between 20 and 40 below zero. The only course is to hunt a hole and stay there until the tempering blizzard has spent itself. Here and there are islands of timber and fortunate indeed is he who can reach one of them or a ravine, or even a snow drift in which to hide when over taken by one of these storms.

During the winter of 1870 with a guide who also acted as driver, I made the journey from Fort Berthold on the Missouri river in St. Cloud, Minn. 450 miles in a sled drawn by four mules. I would have prepared to follow the river, but the Sioux had been prove to a great deal of trouble during the fall and winter, and had had a number of fights with them, whipping them every time, and they sent word to me that it would not be well for me to fall into their hands, I did not doubt them and as they were liable to be met with almost anywhere on the river, my only course was to strike out across country wood or no wood.

It was a very pleasant undertaking, but with the material at hand I rigged up a broad ranger jumper nine feet by four. Cutting up a wall tent I stretched the canvass over the cotton frame, the inside of this was covered with tent paper pasted on, and the whole lined with thick woollen blankets. A small sheet iron stove built of a camp kettle with pipe through top of tent cover, and a box of charcoal attached to rear end of sled, completed the outfit. Our first stopping place was Fort Stevenson 20 miles, the next Fort Totten 150 miles, next Fort Abercrombie 100 miles, then St. Cloud and the rail road 80 miles. Between Fort Totten and Totten we were overtaken by a blizzard and had to anchor our sled, turn the mules loose and creep under cover. Here we staid two days and one night, came within an ace of going hungry out. We had killed the mules with charcoal, shut off the draft and gone to sleep. I was aroused by the half freed guide yelling "fire in the sled" and looking up saw the roof and one end in a blaze. A few minutes more would have set me afoot two hundred miles from the nearest settlement. The mules seemed rather to enjoy the blaze. They would not leave the shelter of the sled instinctively it was.

When we reached Fort Totten we learned that the thermometer had marked 40 degrees below, and had not been above 22 degrees below zero since our departure from Stevenson. At times the wind had blown a tornado. We remained here a few days to gather fresh courage and to allow the mules to recuperate.

A few days before our arrival at Totten a party of five discharged soldiers, and another of four had started afoot for the states. The previous summer mail stations had been established along the trail at intervals of from 15 to 30 miles, only one of which however, had a keeper, (Chevenne.) The mail was two or three weeks behind, and there was some uneasiness regarding these men who had started to cross a country on foot, of which they knew nothing, against the urgent protestations of men who had been years in the country. The stations were scantily supplied with fuel, but no furniture, stoves or fire-places, a hole being left in the roof in one corner, and under this the fire was built. Both parties had reached Cheyenne crossing when we reached there, but only one of the men reached the next station, 30 miles distant. He was too cold to make a fire and was found by the mail-carrier frozen still, and by him buried in the snow near the cabin. Only one of the other bodies was found, the wolves no doubt having devoured them.

That winter and early spring were memorable throughout the territory of Dakota. Men, women and children were frozen, not frost bitten merely, but turned into ice.

At Fort Stevenson a party had gathered at the Post Trader's, distant from the fort about 3 9 miles, when a blizzard came down from the northwest. The snow fell in clouds; the wind roared like a Niagara; the cold became intense.

One of the party started for a fresh supply of fuel, but as soon as he had passed the shelter of the building the wind swept him along in spite of himself. Falling on his hands and knees, he struggled back to the house. Then a rope was tied about his waist, he tried it again, but reach the wood pile only fifty feet distant he could not. They gave it up and went to burning bison, warm at that time fifty cents per pound. When morning came they could see the fort now and then during a lull in the storm, and when it ceased about a town head of Texas mule were found close to the corall force buried in the snow fences veiled. They were turned over to the Indians, who remarked in their choicest language, "Bully."

This was in February. In March a family lived in Jim River bottom, between Yankton and Sioux City, consisting of husband, wife and two children, fairly in the morning the man went to the well (dugout), the prevalence of a blizzard), only thirty yards distant, for water. On his return he missed the house, and was never seen afterward, either dead or alive. The buckets were found, and the marks where he had once stopped to rest. The wife becoming alarmed at his absence, started for the house of a neighbor, but lost in the blizzard and met her husband's fate. Her body was found when the snow left the ground in the spring. Two days after the parents had left the children were found snug in bed, well, but half crazy with hunger and fear.

Will as these stories seem, they are true. If you think I have been drawing the long bow, watch the Dakota and Montana papers this winter and next spring. But people are wiser now, made so by bitter experience, and are generally prepared for those fearful visits. My reason for giving the above instances of suffering is for those of your readers who wish to come to this country to settle may know just what they may have to encounter. I cannot pretend to send you news. Any intelligence relating to Indians, a subject that is of such moment in this country now, and will continue to be so until that problem is worked out to a finding, would not be news by the time it could reach you through the mail, as we have telegraphic communication to the east, and of course in telling of importance you would be able to be able to lay before your readers at an early moment.

The telegraph line was established between Bismarck, the posts on the upper Missouri and the Yellowstone three years ago. The line crosses the Missouri river here, and follows up the Yellowstone valley to the mountains. However, I may if you desire enter more largely into details than is generally given in a telegram.

What will be the upshot of its intended expedition of this Miles against Sitting Bull, it is hard to say. That worthy is, or was at last accounts, some seventy or eighty miles from here, near Poplar Creek Agency. This is where the Sioux walked in last summer and quietly took ponies from. The agent and Inspector Pollock, of the Indian Department, who happened to be passing "up east" for Fort Buford, leaving the Sioux to the engagement of whatever they could find at the agency. I came up the river with the agent and Pollock too. He told me he was and the engineer was there, so that he could see how it was himself, as the authorities in Washington are apt to think that these sons of the plains can be reasoned with and made to see the reverse side of the question. Said he, "I used to think so, too, before I came here, but now I prefer to have my arguments backed by a few infantrymen with long guns." There are two companies of troops at the agency now, and the Sioux still be apt to leave it alone.

The steamer Bucher left here on the 6th inst. with supplies for Gen. Miles, who will it is supposed meet her at the mouth of the Musselshell river. This steamer is chartered by the government at $250 per day, from the time she left here until she returns. The Quartermaster's Department has taken possession of and placed on board (Lt. Kendrick, of Infantry), on her. It is not a very desirable detail, as the chances are about even that she will be frozen in and obliged to remain all winter. There is a spice of an arctic trip about it, and of that I had enough last winter in Colorado and Wyoming, though in this case there will be no lack of fuel.

I have made my letter too long, I fear, but you can cut it down to suit, always remembering that I have given you only the skimmings. But there is a limit to everything, your patience and space not excepted.

The fire is out, my feet are cold, and if you don't object I'll go to bed, which reminds me of a couplet of an old army song:

"And when I go to the Kernel to say I'm a fatherwife his sons, 'Go to bed, and soak yer head'
To the regular army, oh!"

OCCURRENCES OF INTEREST.

Singular Blunders of Letter-Writers.

A Tobacco clerk in the Treasury Office recently sent a letter containing bills about $2,000 to another Treasury clerk about $2,000. A messenger was sent with the money, but the letter was opened and the bills found to be missing. The letter was sealed in the envelope and deposited in the mail without any address whatever. After the letter was opened at the Dead-Letter Office we found the bills and sent them to the right person, considering his delinquency to go South, not specifying any destination, and signing "Stoney." There was no clue to trace the writer and but a slight one to trace the writer. After a long search "Stoney" was discovered on the hotel register, the only person out of thirty-two of the same name who had not been signed his name without saying where he was from or whither going.

Another case, somewhat similar, was the following: A letter was written, dated Arlington New York, signed "Harmony," inclosing two thousand dollars to a lady as a remuneration for the care with which she had treated the writer's child during a severe illness going to Europe. The letter was misdirected and was opened at the Dead-Letter Office. The Postmaster of New York was instructed to trace the writer of the letter, and by the photograph, the address could not be found. Then the

Who must go Boneless?

We are under orders, but hardly realize the Saginaw Herald's discussion of the Centennial commerce. The Herald says:

The year Eighteen will have, among its first and most important duties to elect a United States Senator to fill the balance of the unexpired term till the 4th of March, 1877, and also for the succeeding full term of six years. For the vacancy, probably there will be no choosing, to the present incumbent, Hon. H. P. Baldwin, but the full term we'll not be denied without a contest. For the honorable gentleman the three prominent candidates will be Ex-Gov. John D. Bagley, Eaton; Baldwin and Hon. O. M. Barker, Bath. Of these gentlemen his many marked qualities of person, and many strong and influential friends and supporters. The Herald has a most profound respect for each of the gentlemen, but it also has a first choice, and, as in its position a reason for the faith that is in us. We favor as first choice for this high honor, Ex-Gov. John J. Bagley, and shall hope to see him chosen to fill by the action of the Legislature.

It has been the good fortune of the editor of the Herald to know John J. Bagley from early manhood to the present time. We have witnessed his rise as a lawyer, as a business man, and as a politician and a citizen. We also know that his prosperity has had a free circulation in the most unselfish, generous, liberal and manly manner that man can be expected by every man who enjoys his acquaintance, and as example to every citizen. In overcoming the impediments for the Senatorial office the opposing and the triumphs of the poor and almost friendless young man who has risen by his own vigor and self-assertion to become the peer of the best men in this great State is no small argument in his favor. And to crown the argument, we quote the words of an opponent, who says: "To-day Bagley is a warm champion of the interests of Michigan. He has greatly promoted our business affairs, and his judgment has been of great value in the service of the State. His acquaintance public spirit has made him a favorite representative of Michigan. As Governor, (and as an influential member of society, he has a habit of saying what he means, and means what he says. Finally, then there is nothing wrong or advocating such a man for promotion to any higher and wider fields of usefulness and honor for the men and the State.

But there are political reasons why we prefer the election of Mr. Bagley. We know we need to note that nearly every public and private enterprise which has languished, Mr. Baldwin does it upon the ground that he is the legitimate successor of Senator Chandler, and the Bagley supporters as his antagonists and influences. We certainly beg to take exception to that line of argument. As one of the "old guard" who stood by Senator Chandler from his first campaign in 1852, till he was laid in largeness, without a waver or shadow of turning, we want the idea that his mantle hangs with overwhelming influence over, covers one man more than another. On the contrary, we know that is more than one doubtful contest in the past, from 1857 down to the lowering days of 1876, it required all the power of Chandler's advancement to hold up to the radical standard the man whom we are now asked to "follow," was the equal of our incomparable leader. While we regard this kind of bolstering of any candidate as of doubtful propriety, we feel justified in saying that in all the close and doubtful moments the party has passed through in the State and Nation, the voice and influence of the Bagley have never risen from an uncertain sound, his zeal and interest have never flagged, his standard never been lowered in the face of the enemy.

Aside from the question of the "mantle of succession," we have no criticism to make upon Senator Baldwin's candidacy. We recognize his good qualities and record his virtues, all of which have been suitably and properly rewarded; and it will be no hardship or affront if the people shall elect to divide their honors and favors with others equally worthy and deserving.

Hon. O. D. Cooper has for many years been a recognized leader of the party in the State and in Detroit. He is a man of unquestioned ability, and will have a large following and many enthusiastic supporters. As to merits of Gov. Bagley's claims for the advancement

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

THE census of Germany will be taken on the first of December. The aggregate population of the State and provinces constituting the present German Empire was 45,227,500 in 1875.

ON Wednesday, 17th, the New York Grand Jury found an indictment against Reverend Philip for libel against General Garfield, in connection with the Morey Chinese letter forgery. Philip is still at large under $10,000 bail.

SAYS the Boston Post, a Democratic paper: "If it now pretty evident that the Chinese letter was not only a forgery, but that there was a conspiracy to make it appear genuine. Who were the conspirators, we do not pretend to say."

THERE were about 9,500,000 votes polled in this country at the late Presidential election. The political status of the predecessor of the Greenback party is shown by the fact that of these votes, General Weaver received only about 300,000.

THE anti-Masonic ticket in Pennsylvania received forty-four votes in a total of 874,702. It went to be supposed that the ancient Order of Free and Accepted Masons is much alarmed at this result of the organized opposition to it.

THE Indiana Democrats who received money from chairman Barnum to be used in that state, are suspected of having put it where it will do the most good for themselves. All over the country the managers of that party are under suspicion of this sort.

THE Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says: "It is safe to say that if the sun of the 4th of March next rises upon Levi P. Morton, of New York, as the finish, he will bow Secretary Sherman politely out of the Treasury Department.

THE Chicago Inter Ocean notes as a remarkable fact that the men whom the Republican party has elected President have all been of humble origin, and have themselves accomplished by their own exertions the rise of letter, the tanner, the tailor, the farmer, the canal driver.

SENATOR Ingalls says that to create life, Senator would be to violate that plain of the Constitution which assures to each State its equal representation in the Senate. The proposition to provide in some degree for rural sway for ex-presidents originated in unselfish statesmanship, which deserves only to be laughed at.

SENATOR Jerry Davis, according to Washington advices, is tired of the position in which he has reduced himself to one Democratic vote, and is ready to resign if he can retire to the place he vacated on the Supreme Bench. His resignation would be followed by the election of a Republican to his seat, which would give control of the Senate to the Republicans.

THE Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial says: "Some of the President's friends in Ohio thought it would be the appropriate thing to send Ex-to the Senate—letting him step from the White House to the sixth seat of the Capitol at a single step, so to speak. His term as President expires at 12 o'clock noon on the 4th of March, at the same instant the new Senator's term will begin. This arrangement was suggested to the President, and he was told that if he want of the Senatorship all he had to do was to wink. But he did not wink."

DORMAN B. EATON, Esq., the head of the Everett branch of the bureau, is the chief executive of the family, and the director of its business with the markets of Europe. He is an untiring worker, and usually reaches his bank in the morning before his subordinates. His habits are simple, one of his greatest pleasures being a tour on foot through the streets of Paris long before and after dinner. His wife is a thorough Englishwoman in temperament, and a devotee to out-of-door work. Although a woman popular in society her tastes are always simple, and she wears but little jewelry.

The American Newspaper Reporter gives the following sound advice: "We have a piece of advice which we wish to impress firmly and indelibly upon the public mind, and that is to give the printer fair play. Do not forget that it means something to pull as well as to advertise. Never spouge upon a printer in any way, shape or. It is the printer's ink that makes silk cloths of our fortunes, it takes money to buy ink, type and paper, and yet, after all, few are the thanks the printer gets. Give the printer fair play, and give up all hopes of gratuitous puffing. Daniel Webster was rougher, some right wise he remarked of the printer. Small is the sum awarded to patronize a newspaper, small rewarded are its patrons. Incase are now heavily and oppressively are the taxes which be taken it be next to impossible to fill 1 out without publishing it something that is worth the expenditure price."

WHAT TO DO FOR GEN. GRANT.

If the New York Times was a reputation of general people would doubt the sincerity of its proposition to raise a fund of $250,000, the interest of which should go perpetually to the oldest surviving ex-president. But this not the character of the Times. It is one of the most conservative journals in the country. Too leading its own reputation, people will carefully consider its proposition, but will hardly receive it with favor. Itself concedes Grant at present, though others will receive the benefit of the funds after him. But in discussing this dullest proposition people will be more inclined to look at it through the merits and necessities of the immediate rather than those of the remote beneficiaries. Gen. Grant should never want. All true Americans will agree to that. He deserves that much of his country and of his countrymen. That he is comparatively poor is to be regretted. That it is inexcusable for him to let many of the parents of business men, to maintain himself and family, all thinking people will agree. And that his position as ex-general of the Union armies and ex-president of the United States imposes upon him great burdens of hospitality and a necessary expense from which people of lesser rank are exempt will easily be understood. What, under these circumstances, one or ought to be done? It has been proposed to place Gen Grant on the retired list of the army. But this would only relieve him, and would leave the question unsettled as to other Presidents who will be out of office poor men.

It has been proposed to make an ex-president life-senators. But this would require an amendment to the constitution, which it would take some time to pass and it is very doubtful if it could receive the sanction of the necessary three-fourths of the Senate. In addition to this it is open to this objection that it is dangerous an aristocracy of office holding. It is true that the office is in itself no ex-president and the number of them never be few. But it is not in harmony with Republican institutions on this any number of men, no matter how few, should have life hold of a seat in either branch of congress. And more than this, it is an enduring policy of state and evolution, dangerous from the fact that it is a step in the wrong direction. The Times proposition is certainly worthy consideration. The man of Appomattox should not be permitted to become a private beggar. He belongs to the republic. His deeds and life future are the nation's property. In a large degree this is true of every ex-president. And the nation should take care of them all. A rich nation like ours should not afford to be ungrateful or ungenerous. So more than it can afford to have its ex-presidents in want of the comforts of life. Ex-presidents must always be few. It will be very rare indeed when more than three are alive at once. The care of these or four ex-presidents can never be a burden upon the people. Any life pension that may be given them will never be felt. And this is the true way to take care of them. Pension them for their lives, with a moderate reversion to their widows. Abraham Lincoln's widow is pensioned. The people rejoice that it is so. Grant, and every ex-president should be pensioned. Let a law be passed that will apply to all. Such a law will lighten the future of every man who presides in the White House. It may save the nation from great scandals. And at least it will be a matter of public congratulation that the republic will have evinced itself of the appreciation of its gratitude, and disregard of the mercenary rule of those who serve it with fidelity.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

THE SUNNY SOUTH.

A Grand Traverse Gentleman Jots Down for the Sentinel His Observations in the South.

(Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 16, 1880.

FRIEND SETH:

I take this opportunity to make good to you my promise to write you from the South. Since leaving home I have seen a great deal of country. In leaving Michigan one notes a State noted for its thrift, and I never have appreciated the fact more than since leaving home.

On my way South I passed through Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and part of Georgia. I do not like Indiana. It is a flat, wet country, with poor farms, poor fences, and a general appearance that indicates a lack of energy. Ohio gives one rather a better impression. The farms look well, and the stock is fine. But in no State yet have I seen farm buildings that can compare with those of Michigan.

I stopped in the city of Cincinnati three weeks, and to give you a graphic description of it would furnish me with steady employment for a week. Imagine Chicago surrounded with high mountain peaks, covered from base to apex with buildings of the grandest architectural beauty, and on the top of each hill a grand amphitheatre, capable of seating 12,000 people, lighted by electricity, and the vast concourse of people taking street cars at their several homes and landed without change of cars at the very door. In these pavilions you hear the finest music in the world, and all for fifteen cents, the price of a glass of lager and your car fare. It may seem like a small price, and it is, but they make money.

Like all other great cities, Cincinnati has its places of degradation. But I think there is less vice here than in any city of the size in the world. One reason for this is that no city of its size in the world has done so much for education, art, science and music, or financed so liberally for the support of its public institutions. Its population is largely German, and so then the city is in a great measure indebted for its high morals and enterprise.

I made a trip down the Ohio river to Louisville, Ky., and also visited Covington. This, to use the native phrase, is a right smart place. It is a commercial center, and has extensive iron works and factories. But I understand Cincinnati capital is represented largely in Covington manufactories. It is only across the Ohio river from Cincinnati, and is, in fact a part of the great city.

I left Covington for Lexington, which is a busy place, and in the center of the best farming district in the State. But it is a slow Southern town, and has improved but little since I has saw it, in 1865. I left Lexington by the Cincinnati Southern R. R. ride Point Burnside and the Cumberland Mountains for Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and Chickamauga.

The Cincinnati Southern is a masterpiece of railroading. Crossing the Cumberland Mountains and River, and the Tennessee River, it passes through twenty-eight tunnels, varying in length from five rods to two and one-half miles, and although its southern terminus is only 348 miles from Cincinnati, I candidly believe it covers 500 miles of roadbed. The scenery through which this road passes is grand and romantic. The people along the line are simple, kind hearted, and generous to a fault. I accepted an invitation to visit the Lodge at Chatanooga, and lecture to the Fraternity, and I never saw such devotion to Masonry.

The people are generally glad to see Northern people come among them, and many express the wish that more would come. I have during my trip met all kinds of Southern people, even those who opposed us on the battle field, and I never yet met more consistent people or kinder friends than I have since I left the border of the Northern States. I can talk politics with as much freedom as at home, and will not believe any more serious I hear about that gun rule in the South. There is much good will expressed toward the North, and to a great extent they feel kindly toward Hayes and Garfield. The Democrats here say Garfield is all right, and that the Democratic party is now forever dead; for which fact I say thank God, for through its death we will now have a united country.

Well, I suppose it will not do for me to close without a description of Chatanooga. How the name name thrills the hearts of thousands yet living! Yonder I gaze upon Lookout Mountain, where General Hooker fought his memorable battle above the clouds. Yesterday I stood on that high rock where nineteen years ago stood Gens ale Hood, Johnson and Longstreet, viewing the Union forces as they marched through this beautiful valley with a steady tread to the conflict. Two miles to the southeast, on White Oak Mountain, stood Thomas and Sherman and saw our boys ascend the rocky cliffs and drive the flower of the South from the strongest position they ever held. As I stood on the peak of Lookout Mountain, seventeen hundred feet above the Tennessee river, and gazed into five States of the Union, and looked into the city and valley below, with its memories of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, and Buzzard's Roost took off my hat in silent awe.

Few places have become more renowned for business, and more attractions than Chatanooga and its contiguous Lookout Mountain. Its natural beauty is not more grand than its memories are inspiring. Its beautiful lakes, rivers, cascades, and glens, in beds and channels run out seemingly from solid rock, curtained by mountains and caves, are objects of interest. A trip to Lookout Mountain, and a dinner at the Cottage Home, seems like a dream.

I thing many of our Northern people make a great mistake in going to Florida for health or pleasure. Here the thermometer is never higher than 70 or lower than 10 above zero. Yesterday the flowers were in bloom—cucumbers, magnolias, and roses. For good accommodations it surpasses any place at which I have been since leaving my friend Andrews at Petoskey. Here the hotel rates are reasonable, but in Chattanooga they are high, and you get nothing but niggers, who are really the only ones who are getting rich fast.

I am now thinking of trying to get into a hotel in this city, but the plan will not prevent me running my house at Torch Lake during the summer.

There is a big travel here from the North, and they all rave Southern hotels. I don't blame them.

Yours,

F. J. LEWIS.

The cause of the Democratic vote in California is explained by one of the intelligent voters of San Francisco who believed that "some good things may be said of Mather Garfield, but I could never make me mcind to vot for a man who would wride a forged letther."

It is stated that in his next message Gov. Cornell, of New York, will earnestly recommend the proposal that ex-Presidents should have seats as Senators at large in the United States Senate. Senator Conkling is said to be unqualifiedly committed to it, and the Governor's views on the subject will doubtless emphasize those of the Senator.

It was the last mule which Ramon harnessed that kicked in his dash-board, and knocked every occupant of the Democratic wagon a double somersault to the rear. The Democrat is statesman, 1880 seem to have had it kicked into them.

A CINCINNATI telegram of the 28d states that A. J. Tuttle, a lawyer, and Jacob Nine, who were isolated on the Grand Jury for forgery, had been arrested, and Tuttle, the Methodist, as associate would be arrested, charged with the forging of three deeds to large tracts of land in Illinois, Iowa and other States, thereby defrauding innocent purchasers. The forgeries of which they are charged are of a startling character, being made to have possession of land owned by the executors of the millionaire Jeremiah Tuttle, who died two years ago. It is said some 10,000 acres of land in Iowa, in the vicinity of Fort Dodge, have thus been fraudulently conveyed, and investigation is now occupying the property.

The annual report of the Register of the Treasury states that the total tonnage of the country exhibits a decrease of 105,566 tons, the enrolled tonnage having increased 87,733 tons, while the registered tonnage decreased 188,299 tons. Bearing in ship-building, the Register asserts that in the past year the amount of building has been less by 95,620 tons than that of the preceding year.

The remains of the late Governor of Indiana (Williams) were moved in the cemetery on his homestead at Wheatland on the 26th.

The official canvass of the vote of Indiana shows the following result: Hartzell, 231,586; Hancock, 225,522; Weaver, 12,986. Hartzell's majority, 6,064. The result shows that, after all, the Republican candidate for Governor of the Eighth District has been elected, and the total Greenback vote of Indiana will therefore be cast for Hartzell.

PRESIDENT-ELECT GARFIELD arrived at Washington on the evening of the 25th. At his own request there was no public reception. He was met at the depot by a few friends, and drove at once to his residence

Prof. Gordon writes us that he is to give another fifteen days course at Traverse City. The well spend the holidays at home, after which he will come up to Lansing to be present at the election of a U. S. Senator, and then come to Charlevoix for a ten week's musical course. A class for the piano is also promised him here.

The snakes are not and the certainty is assured that Charlevoix will have the biggest "boom" next summer that it has ever experienced. A great many building projects are now contemplated, to say nothing of the Resort, which alone will be very extensive, and the impetus which will be given our town by the institution of new manufacturing establishments, and the enlargement of others, will be, we predict, beyond even our expectations.

Archie Buttars, who has just been elected State Senator from this District, came to this region a poor boy in 1858. He was always a steady, industrious boy, and by strict attention to business and great energy he became one of the leading business men of Charlevoix, and a prosperous one also. He was in a fair way to become one of the leading and most respected of her townsmen, but, poor fellow, he has been called to the Senate. He certainly deserved a better fate, and we hope he may even yet return from the political wranglings at Lansing to continue in his career of usefulness as a citizen of Charlevoix.—Traverse Bay Eagle.

Several Dry Times.

An interesting record is that of severe droughts, so far back as the landing of the Pilgrims. How many thousand times are observations made like the following: "Such a cold season" "Such a hot season!" "Such wet weather" or "Such dry weather!" "Such high winds or rains," etc. Read the following list, showing the number of days without rain:

In the summer of 1621, 24 days.
In the summer of 1636, 11 days.
In the summer of 1645, 76 days.
In the summer of 1662, 80 days.
In the summer of 1674, 45 days.
In the summer of 1680, 21 days.
In the summer of 1694, 62 days.
In the summer of 1709, 40 days.
In the summer of 1715, 46 days.
In the summer of 1728, 61 days.
In the summer of 1730, 92 days.
In the summer of 1741, 72 days.
In the summer of 1794, 108 days.
In the summer of 1795, 42 days.
In the summer of 1762, 123 days.
In the summer of 1773, 30 days.
In the summer of 1791, 82 days.
In the summer of 1812, 28 days.
In the summer of 1856, 24 days.
In the summer of 1871, 12 days.
In the summer of 1875, 26 days.
In the summer of 1876, 25 days.

It will be seen that the longest drought that ever occurred in America was in the summer of 1762. Not rain fell from the last of May to the last of September. Many of the inhabitants sent to England for hay and grass.

Dr. HAWKINS, U. S. A., who has the honor to preside over the destinies of Charlevoix harbor, by the grace of God and the War Department, is "an officer and a gentleman." Inspector Little, who, by the appointment of Col. Harwood, is supervising among us, is a gentleman of whose acquaintance we are proud. But there is a feature of the improvement of Charlevoix harbor that will bear criticism. Last winter's appropriation has been available since early in the summer. Colonel Harwood in the full knowledge of the necessities of a bar in the channel, has neglected to make the repairs in the breakwater necessary to prevent it. By reason of this neglect our commerce has suffered. This is one feature of the matter. There is another. After the long and [illegible] days of summer have passed, and the rigors of winter are upon us, an inspector is dispatched here to mend the break in the revetment, and build the superstructure upon the mush pier, which is already covered with ice. Now, when it is considered that the inspector gets $3 per day and no lost time, that he is paid from the funds appropriated, and that he cannot work more than one day in three, the justice of our criticism will be apparent. One day in summer would have been worth two now, besides having the effect of locking the barn door before the horse was stolen. No hard feelin's, Colonel.

The vote shows what class of citizens the two great parties most delight to honor.

The Contest Situation.

The closing scenes of the 48th Congress open on Monday next with Democratic majorities in both Houses and Democratic control of the Executive Department. The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives is small, but sufficient for the purposes of the chief leaders and the caucus of each other important measure necessary to carry to a successful issue the business of the session. The Democratic majority in the Senate is also

FOR CHRISTMAS.

The closing exercises of the 16th Congress came on Monday, and terminates on March 4. Two months these should be. The session of course for the holidays, and then home to Members, our hope is efficient for the passage of the chief bills on the calendar, and such other legislation now necessary to not be brought before Congress. The appropriations bills will be but in order and probably occupy first half, if not all next session, except on the point of paying arrears Court and pensions of claimants. As these bills are in the nature of charges of sentiment on the country by the Democratic party, as a precaution to that unanimity seems was to expected. The most important new legislation will be the disposal of public lands bill. Such a bill must be passed by this or the succeeding Congress, or there are strong apprehensions of its not passing at all, taking it should be declared at the coming session of the present ministry. It should even at most of the same legislation we will have advanced it will be practically immortal when it is passed by the present or the 47th Congress. At this a Democratic Congress and the next one will not be it is certain an effort will be made to pass one appropriation bill and, if it fails over, both sessions passed it be accepted by the country as proper case considerably by expected. A refunding bill, of some importance, also either of these has been before up in Congress long, but it passed on the floor of the other was for good bonds to run forty years at 3 per cent. Such a bill would be of great benefit to the country, but it is not probable that it will be passed at this session. The session Lame Duck is supposed have a full share of last sessions who do no good.

Senator Conkling has been re-elected by the Legislature of New York, receiving 111 votes, against 79 for Governor Cornell, Republican, and 14 for Governor Robinson, Democrat. Mr. Conkling's term will expire March 4, 1881. He was elected in 1867, 1873 and 1879. The Democrats voted for Governor Robinson, and the Republicans for Governor Cornell. Mr. Conkling received the votes of 14 Democrats, and Governor Cornell received the votes of 14 Republicans. Governor Robinson received the votes of 14 Democrats, and Governor Cornell received the votes of 14 Republicans. Mr. Conkling received the votes of 14 Democrats, and Governor Cornell received the votes of 14 Republicans. Mr. Conkling received the votes of 14 Democrats, and Governor Cornell received the votes of 14 Republicans.

The Republicans will be left to their own counsels in effecting to control the organization.

Congress will not assemble in a temper to work in full session, and though the Democrats be compelled to make the other parties responsible, the Democrats will gladly put the responsibility of a change on the next Republican Congress.

The Herd will at no distant day organize, but the honest will be left out entirely, and a reorganization will be made to month of January.

The changes must be made by the Democrats, for it will hardly excite much attention or concern which they make. They will make no promises which may or may not be redeemed in the future. For this reason, we may not be entirely controlled the political policy of either the senate, it is not likely they will commence a new field of their or to even promise to some of the measures individual to succeed.

But the organizing force must rest with the Republicans in the next session, to provide for changes in the constitution to the manner of choosing Presidential and many other important subjects in the list of the present Congress, but they will not be. They will be called to order and immediately thereafter the Republicans organize as the new Congress.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

TO THE SENATE OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

In compliance with the constitution and the usage established by my predecessors, I have the honor to present to the Congress information touching the condition of the Union and such recommendations as I deem necessary to the public welfare. In the selection of topics for this communication, with a few exceptions, I have followed those which were brought to the attention of the Congress by my predecessor in his last annual message, and which have since remained in the same position relatively to the public interests that they then occupied. Questions which have arisen since that time, and which have become prominent in the knowledge of the country, will receive the attention due to their importance, and such as require legislation will be submitted to the consideration of the Congress with the least possible delay consistent with proper deliberation.

The constitution requires that the President shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. My office affords me opportunities for observing the operations of the different Departments of the Government and the conduct of all classes of public servants, which make it my duty to obtain the information required by the constitution to be given to the Congress, and it is therefore a source of gratification to me to be able to say that the various branches of the public service are conducted with success and efficiency, and that the public business is in a satisfactory condition. Many interesting details of the operations of the several Executive Departments, and of the progress of work in the charge of subordinate bureaus, are contained in the reports made to me by the heads of those Departments, and I commend them to your careful consideration, as containing valuable recommendations touching the matters of legislation with which they deal.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury presents in detail the condition of the finances, the operations of the various branches of the public service committed to his charge, and the estimates of the moneys required for the support of the Government during the next fiscal year. The attention of the Congress is especially invited to the important recommendations made by the Secretary for the improvement of the system of collecting the revenue from customs, and for the correction of certain defects in the present tariff laws. The report of the Secretary of War presents a satisfactory exhibit of the operations of his Department, and contains many valuable suggestions touching the present organization of the military establishment, and the legislation required for its improvement. The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows the present state of the Navy to be one of great efficiency, and evinces the intelligent and faithful administration of the Department. The suggestions which it contains in regard to the policy to be pursued in the construction of new vessels, and in the maintenance of navy-yards, are worthy of careful consideration. The report of the Postmaster-General presents a most gratifying exhibit of the condition of the Department over which he presides. The deficiency in the revenues of the Department, which existed at the date of the last annual report to the Congress, has been entirely overcome, and the Department is now self-sustaining. The cash receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, were $36,915,000, and the expenditures for the same period were $36,805,000, leaving a surplus revenue of $110,000. The increase of revenue for the year was $2,381,000, and the increase of expenditures, $2,420,000. The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents a full and interesting exhibit of the operations of the several bureaus of the Department, and contains many recommendations which will be found worthy of your consideration. The report of the Attorney-General presents a satisfactory exhibit of the business of the Department of Justice, and contains recommendations for such changes in the laws as will promote the efficiency of the administration of the law. The report of the Postmaster-General presents a most satisfactory exhibit of the operations of the Department of the Post-Office. The increase of the revenue for the fiscal year was $2,381,000, and the increase of expenditures, $2,420,000. THE CIVIL SERVICE.

In my former annual message I expressed the sentiment of Congress in the present organization of a Department of Civil Service at the commencement of the next session. My views concerning the importance of such action have been strengthened by my observation and experience during the past year, and I trust that these matters thereafter the stability of the system may be secured by the enactment of such legislation as will remove it from political contests. They have also been confirmed by the reports of the Civil Service Commissioners, which show that the system is working well in the Departments to which it has been applied, and that its introduction into the public service has relieved the appointing officers of much unnecessary labor, and has secured the appointment of competent persons to the positions to which they have been assigned. The Commissioners have also been able to render valuable assistance to the Executive in the preparation of rules for the regulation of the service, and I am satisfied that the system will be found to be of great benefit to the country.

Continued opposition to the full and free enjoyment of the right of citizens to participate in the management of the public affairs of the country is manifested by the passage of State constitutional amendments by the Legislatures of several States, which not only deny the right to persons who cannot read the English language, but to persons who cannot read any language. Many citizens are thus deprived of the right to vote who have heretofore been entitled to exercise it, and who are in no way responsible for the fact that they cannot read. The persons thus disfranchised are largely those who, having been born and reared under the influence of our institutions, are in every way entitled to the privilege of citizenship. The operation of these laws has been to deprive many of our citizens of the right to vote who have heretofore been entitled to exercise it, and who are in no way responsible for the fact that they cannot read. The persons thus disfranchised are largely those who, having been born and reared under the influence of our institutions, are in every way entitled to the privilege of citizenship.

It is the duty of the National people of the whole country that no State shall by its action or its policy impair the rights of any citizen of the United States to vote in any election. The power and authority of the National Government must be preserved unimpaired in all its integrity, and it must not be forgotten that the people of every State have a common interest in the preservation of the rights of the citizens of every State. The constitutional amendments were adopted for the purpose of securing to the citizens of the United States the blessings of freedom, and the equal rights of citizenship, and they must be maintained.

I recommend that Congress provide for the government of Utah by a Territorial Legislature, to be composed of persons who are in sympathy with the institutions of the United States, and who will be in accord with the principles of the National Government. The act of Congress approved March 22, 1862, has been practically inoperative, and the result has been to continue the government of the Territory in the hands of persons who are in open hostility to the institutions of the United States, and who exert their influence to encourage a belief among the people that they are not in any way subordinate to the National authority. The act of March 3, 1870, has been practically inoperative, and the result has been to continue the government of the Territory in the hands of persons who are in open hostility to the institutions of the United States, and who exert their influence to encourage a belief among the people that they are not in any way subordinate to the National authority.

The Mormon Church still claims the right to control the political action of its members, and exacts from them implicit obedience to its mandates. The Mormon Church is a constant menace to the peace of the Territory, and the people of the United States have a right to demand that the power of the National Government shall be exerted to the extent necessary to secure the supremacy of the laws of the United States and the suppression of practices which are in violation of the principles of our civilization, and which are a reproach to the Christian nations of the world.

I also recommend such legislation as will secure the punishment of all offenses against the elective franchise, and of all conspiracies to deprive citizens of the free exercise of the right of suffrage, which the constitution expressly declares shall be exercised without restraint.

CHARLEVOIX, DEC. 14, 1880.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Letter From Norman.

Oklahoma, Dec. 6, 1880.

To the Editor of the CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL:

The summer of 1880 will be a marked era in the history of summer hotels and resorts. The heated term began early, and came to stay. Everybody who could spare the money wanted to get out of the hot, dry, choking cities. The steamboats were crowded; the cars, though hot and dusty, still were filled. Everywhere money was being freely spent in order to get cool, and enjoy a little rest.

We learn that in the East, summer visitors flocked to the shores by hundred of thousands. At Long Branch there is hotel accommodation for 10,000 people. In addition to this the Branch has been visited by 200,000 excursionists. It is estimated from both sources there has been spent an income of $1,750,000.

The whole of New Jersey coast, from Sandy Hook to Squam, is dotted at short intervals of a few miles with summer hotels, many of them competing in size and appointment with those of Long Branch.

All these have been thronged, and it is thought that altogether the money spent by visitors along this part of the New Jersey road would not fall below $10,000,000. A New York Herald reporter, who has been canvassing these and other resorts, says: "One million and a half dollars were spent on excursions to such places as Glen Alpine and points up the Hudson, and that if nine were to go further, and add on what has been spent at the races, in visits to picnic grounds, by rail and sailing craft and the money spent in a hundred ways of pleasure seeking, of which no account can ever be had, it ought to be found that the three million people who live in and around New York expended this year over $18,000,000 in keeping cool and enjoying themselves.

So much for the east. Let us look at the great west. This has been a prosperous year. Money has been spent freely by those in easy circumstances. In the last days of July and August Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and smaller towns emptied themselves of thousands of their dwellers. Those in St. Louis and Chicago sought the cooler shades of the north. The resorts of Wisconsin received many who had never entered them before. Railroad trains and the lake steamers were alike filled.

Many exercise themselves with a trip around the lakes to Buffalo and return, some to Montreal and return, and others as far as Niagara Falls by the Grand Trunk steamers and St. Lawrence boats.

Some inquiries amongst the steamboat agents elicited the facts that berths were often engaged two weeks ahead, and they did not care to promise berths to intermediate points. Putting the basis for expenses as in low rates, we have calculated that a Western Transportation company steamer carried out 20,000 to be spent in a pleasure trip during these hot months, every trip they left Chicago. A little thought will carry these figures up into large sums, when we remember that the Union Steamboat company, the Grand Trunk steamers, all of them, carried—and taste full compliment of passengers, while Goodrich's steamers, Hannah, Lay & Co.'s steamer brought full loads over into Michigan, and Leopold and Austina's steamers were will filled with passengers for the upper peninsula. One can readily think what large sums of money are thus spent through the northwest.

Of the numbers that came in this section we know something. Every day the City of Grand Rapids and Clara Belle brought in numbers of visitors, and mountains of baggage—sometimes as many as seventy-five passengers each time, while the Fountain City and Idaho added to the numbers of visitors every time they came in. The hotels were taxed in their stores, to entertain guests. This only includes those who came in by Lake. Michigan entrances; others coming in by Bernie City, and stopping there, or at other points along the butcher's lake.

We think we are putting a low estimate when we say $20,000 has been spent during the summer in this vicinity for hotel expenses, steamboat fare, stage lines, guides, etc.

The prospects in Charlevoix are opening up fairer than ever, if a wise and judicious course is pursued. The people in the eastern states guess neither pains nor money to make routes attractive for summer travel. New roads are opened, steamboat routes started in what has been thought inaccessible, money spent freely in making improvements and drawing visitors, knowing that the time, labor and capital expended was a good paying investment. It has proved so, and in the coming years will draw many more to these summer fishing and hunting grounds.

Unless Charlevoix would indulge in a Rip Van Winkle nap, and let other places get ahead of her, something of the kind must be done here. Now let others point out plans that may be very much improved by the outlay of a small amount of money, such improvements that would benefit the whole community, not in the end draw off larger sums of summer visitors to this lovely Pine Lake region.

CHARLEVOIX HARBOR.

Its Increasing Commerce—The Growing Necessity For Its Improvement.

An obscure newspaper called the Echo, published at Detroit, prints the following paragraph:

One of the items in the list of estimates for appropriations by Superintendent to Michigan rivers and harbors for the next fiscal year is $5,000 for a piery and necessary to shoot off snags and rock and make safe to say the least.

For unblushing falsity the above is an admirable sample. In woof and warp it is utterly untrue, and therefore unjust.

There never has been a period in the history of the improvement of Charlevoix harbor when an appropriation was not a "necessity" in the interest of 2,000 people, and a factor in the development of a section extending twenty miles interior. At this time the commerce of a county with navigable waters having ninety miles of coastline must live or die with the condition of Charlevoix harbor.

We call the attention of Congress and the Echo to the following exhibit of the trade of the past season, carefully compiled from the Custom House records:

Tonnage.	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
Pds. Wood	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
Pds. Bark	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
R. R. Ties.	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
Posts.	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
Lumber in feet.	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000
Shg. Timber, cords feet.	Entered	1,000
	Cleared	1,000

In addition to this showing of exports, the Pine Lake Iron Company alone have received at their furnace, five miles southeast of this village, 2,000 tons of iron ore, 2,000 tons of brick, and 1,500 tons of merchandise and other material.

The above institution alone, which will be in full operation after Feb. 15, will annually handle over their docks 50,000 tons of freight, every pound of which must pass through Charlevoix harbor.

Instead of the 500 people, with which the Echo credits the region tributary to Charlevoix harbor, there are 5,000! Instead of two sawmills, there are seven, and more coming. But sawmills are not the only factors in commerce. The above table will show what our hardwood and cedar forests contribute to the trade of the lakes.

The extent and timbered wealth of the region which finds its natural outflow through Charlevoix harbor is of, stupendous magnitude. The various means of utilizing nature's vast crop which has for centuries been ripening here are being brought to bear, and their contributions to the commerce of the great northern lakes will ultimately repay the government more than one hundred-fold for the outlay necessary in keeping its port in repair.

—John Dodds cut his leg with an axe last Monday, inflicting an ugly wound.

—Couldn't the government turn Gen Grant into the Treasury with a spoon, so we could all have a rest in regard to his future financial condition?

—Dr. Wesley of Cross Village, passed through our town last Monday and gave us a short call. The Dr. and Cline used to be neighbors in Hendersion.

—Several of the parishioners of Rev. D. H. Pierce from Maplegrove and Fairgrove gave him a call last Thursday. They had a social time and left $25 worth of substantials behind them.

Norwood Notes.

—Very little ice in the bay yet.

—It is just splendid sleighing now.

—Most of the horses around here are having a touch of epizootic.

—Grand Christmas ball at Meech's hall on Friday evening, Dec. 24. A fine time is anticipated by those who indulge in that kind of amusement.

—The boys are all expected home from the Jordan this week to spend Christmas and New Year's, which will cause a great amount of rejoicing among the young ladies of Norwood, who have been rather hard up for escorts to places of amusement for the last two months.

H. H. Vanurman, Esq., has gone to visit friends in parts unknown. A sudden call to see Abe Gates. It was an urgent call, and his visit is likely to be somewhat protracted. "He left his country for his country's good." Perhaps his own good had something to do with it. Where was the sheriff of Charlevoix county about that time? Echo answers, "where?"

PRYORY ANN.

Notes From Advance.

—A. E. Hayes thinks he has the Florida fever.

—Advance is more lively than ever this winter.

—The SENTINEL is the principal paper taken here.

—Charles Heller has sold his hotel, and removes to his farm in April next.

—Our school is well kept by Mr. McDonald, of North Branch, Lapeer county.

—Chancey Baker, the original postmaster of Advance, is about moving to central Tennessee.

—There are at the present time forty white men and fifty Indians employed in this village, and more wanted.

—There has two saw mills and a grist mill. The people bring their flour from the railroad, and their lumber from various places.

—Mr. Geo. Randall, the owner of the old stand formerly occupied by A. E. Hayes, is filling it up with merchandise of every description, and has several men and teams in the woods getting out hardwood logs for Chicago.

—Peter Karlenkin is doing a thriving business, as usual, employing thirty wood choppers and teams enough to move the wood to the bank of the lake as soon as cut. Of himself, he is looking lonely and disconsolate since the death of his white Spaniel dog, which happened two weeks ago. Cause, poison from the hands of the butcher's clerk.

Letter of Thanks.

To the Editor of the Sentinel:

I would like to state in the columns of your paper that our home was taken possession of last Thursday by several well known citizens of the township of Hayes, who loaded our tables with good things, of which they invited us to partake; and after spending a few hours with us, left us a pleasant good-bye, leaving with us almost twenty dollars in money and other things still better. The only thing that seemed to mar was the fact that several of our absent ones were not able to be present to enjoy the pleasantness of the occasion. All concerned have our warmest thanks.

D. H. PIERCE AND FAMILY.

We have received three cakes of very fine Christmas presents to-day, which will be sold very cheap. Examine the stock before purchasing. Also we will have a large stock of standard books on Wednesday, at Dr. Crouter's.

CARPENTER & BARDELOVEN keep at their Saw Mills at all hours.

PLAIN LANGUAGE FROM UNCLE SAM.

Words to why I oppose—
And my language is plain—
That my reasons are dark,
And for ridicule but no vain,
The Money Chains is jewelry
Which the nation I would rise to explain.

Harrison was the second choice
If I did not say third time
Might imply—would be crime
But the truth it was which said Trudnikka.
As I frequently remarked to Marse, Jewell.

'Twas the labor and health
Of the Blaine Logan ticket
That I wished to defend
To life-long price saved,
And to place it into the open Garfield
And sun, in a way I desired.

Which we had a victory's
Of the Blaine Logan ticket,
It was Pay Day for some
He did not understand
But he called on the Committee,
With a smile that was Truth-like and bland.

But to tell of men were
By profits of the ticket
And of its success
Which was counted full of mules in a bar'l,
And each wearing a bribery halter.

But the drivers had
Of the Democratic party
And the lash for to whip
Into line for to vote
And to cast a straight letter,
And swear "That James wrote it is clear."

Then, if "Stalwart" counted I,
And he called me a "Scalp"
And I rose with a sigh
That I was not a "Man-eating sheep forging"
And we went to the Mercy Chime.

In the scene that ensued
All the "Stalwarts" were there,
And my throat was so hoarse
That I could not cry "Fair,"
For, O, they were terribly wroth.

In his case which some long
Had my name on the list
And he fiercely swore
That I was a "Mugwump Fiend"
Turned into a person Nasty Chimes.

Which is why I nonplused,
And then left with ease
That Pete Turpin over end
Though absent at the time
Why try to compass me the people by it,
When he could be a tool to do it.—Exchange.

A Little Speech by the Next President.

After casting their votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, 370 paid a visit to General Garfield, at Mentor, and extended the usual felicitations. The President-elect made the following happy response:

I was deeply grateful to you for this call and for the kind words you have spoken in behalf of myself and my family. I am profoundly sensible of the result reached in the light of a personal standpoint as a personal question. It would probably not be gratifying as anything could to my self-love. If I can say it without impropriety, the unanimous vote in any State is the highest honor that can be conferred upon a citizen. It is not a question of party. It is not a question of personal preference. It is not a question of locality. It is not a question of section. It is not a question of race. It is not a question of religion. It is not a question of nationality. It is not a question of birth. It is not a question of wealth. It is not a question of poverty. It is not a question of education. It is not a question of learning. It is not a question of ignorance. It is not a question of anything else that can be named. It is a question of the highest honor that the most potent sovereignty in the American system can confer upon the man and orders him to do a duty, that man is what the most sacred obligation of duty, namely, those that the free of the universe can impose. I am profoundly impressed with the vote of every State in the United States of the Union, it is probable the reason was given at any great length on any occasion, but in this as in many upon me. If he has come so, I am as sensible of the honor, appreciative and purpose as I could be found in public office and station. I am profoundly impressed with the vote of every State in the Union, therefore, I stand now as used to the majority and a majority of a majority. In so far as I can recognize the best aspirations and judgment of my against sovereign, I shall seek to realize them. You and I and all the people are interested in the success of the party to which we belong. We have always desire for all success, but we have a higher purpose and duty, under the sway of just and equal laws.

Gentlemen, I thank you for this visit, for this welcome, for the congratulations that your presence and your words have, and the hope that you have expressed that in the administration of the duties of the office to which I am called the standard of integrity and purpose of all that heard and worthy to this country, and that during the coming four years every man, just as large a crop of peace, prosperity, happiness, liberty and culture as it is possible to raise for forty-one millions of people to raise.

The Final Verdict.

One suggestion is certainly in order. It is meant only for those Democrats who wish to be prudent and wise. They have some sense of self-respect. It is about time to put down "Dog" and "Cat" mongering the American people. No Democratic politician or journal can make anything by such business. But when the Democratic politician or editor says that President Hayes is a fraud, or that General Garfield is a perjurer or briber-taker, he no longer inserts an individual. He insults a majority of the people of this country, and a very large majority of the people of the Northern States.

Much has been exclaimed in respect to President Hayes's consideration of the unhonest dispute as to his election. We can understand that the Democratic party could not see how Mr. Hayes was legally and honestly elected, may naturally have come to that conclusion. It was a mistake, in that spirit of protest he began to wrangle in the country four years ago, and has been spreading ever since. The American people have heard all that he has had to say. It is an insult to them to say that they have now sustained the Republican party, believing that it captured the Presidency by fraud four years ago. A large majority of the Northern people are declared by the Democratic editor to be unmitigated scoundrels, when he asserts that the party which they have now sustained, and continued in power, obtained the Presidency in 1876 by fraud. The plain truth is that the party could not be beaten against the Democratic claim. They hold that the elections in certain Southern States were vitiated by Democratic violence and fraud; that the country was compelled to choose between a President chosen by shot-guns and bludgeons, and a President chosen by the operation of stringent and arbitrary laws enacted at the South for the purpose of preventing such frauds; and that the decision of President Hayes was in accordance with the real will of the people as lawfully expressed. That is the final verdict. After hearing all that Democrats have said for four years, the American people so decide. Common decency and self-respect require Democrats to submit to the decision.

As to General Garfield, the case is still more simple. July, August, September and October were crowded with lies about him. Every Democratic newspaper published them. Every Democratic orator repeated them. Every Democratic committee scattered them. Every Democratic stump-speaker, under the sway of just and equal laws, repeated them.

Well, when we had a victory's
Of the Blaine Logan ticket
It was Pay Day for some
He did not understand
But he called on the Committee,
With a smile that was Truth-like and bland.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, DEC. 21, 1880.

WILL. SLED & SMITH, EDIT. & PUB. CHARLEVOIX.

THE NEW POSITION.

The Senatorial contest in this State is being very generally discussed by the press and the people. The present indications are that Eugene Hughes, Ex-gov. Bagley and Congressman D. B. Cooper, Irish statesmen ardent and enthusiastic friends of Democracy crowned at once complete the new and powerful trio of which was composed Senator Jerome and ex-Gov. Bagley.

It is not our purpose, however, to speculate upon the relative or individual merits and support of the respective candidates. We briefly set forth and comment on the reasons why the 15th ward, Mount Pleasant can with justice to other of the citizens, has the most popular candidate for Governor. For this honor we consider of the late Senator Chandler's term—from the meeting of the Legislature on the 4th of March next—we desire to see the present incumbent—his gore Bagley—re-elected. For the full term of six years, commencing with the 4th of March next, our friend Stephen is the choice. Bagley's self we are gratified to know that in the expression of preferences, we are in harmony with a great majority of the people. By our Bagley is favored from the circumstance of his having been the last to a poor back woods lad, and by long years to his present exalted position solely through his own unaided efforts. His career from an humble beginning has been marked by a series of energy, integrity and unpleasant worthy of emulation. Not long ago one of his opponents said the of him:

"Bagley, Bagley is a warm champion of the interests of Michigan. He has proudly contended for Lumber's rights, and his judgment has been of great value in the councils of the State. His exemplary public spirit has made him a favorite representative of Michigan. As a governor, and as an honest defender of industry, he has made a record that will always shine in our history."

This overall endorsement by a rival is justly worthy of all to consider the fact that Bagley never had a better Governor than he is.

One more word on this. Bagley is an popular name. The people of Kentucky McClure is the time of the centennial and active, and the task in securing the attendance of liberal hands. As it will have a particularly friendly effect, for the people from counties far a long series of years, and the burden of opening up the difficult commencement roads and bridges, erecting county houses and other public buildings and making improvements which enhanced the value of and real property with that of the county—which to be borne exclusively by those who had the courage to push into the wilderness and live our lonely lives. Efforts were made from time to time by them to secure the passage of a law for the taxation of railroad lands but they failed of course the Railroad Companies owning the powers indeed nearly exercised their influence against all legislation for taxing their property. A majority of each Legislature, prior to 1872, appeared to be in the control the Railroads; and, as far as we are aware, Gov. Bagley's predecessors were content that things should move along in the old way. At any rate none of them had the moral courage to come out boldly on the side of the people and recommend the taxation of railroad lands, whatever may have been their views on the subject. Gov. Bagley came into office early in January, 1873, and among his first and most earnest recommendations was the passing of a measure for the taxation of railroad lands. His comrade experience as a poor man among Bay's woodsmen enabled him to understand the privations and burdens incident to pioneer life, and qualified for the generous promptings of a kindly heart, he resolved to commend his wishes. The writer of this article being at the town's meeting of the lower branch of the Legislature) happened such a bill; and he knows from personal knowledge how desperately its passage was resisted by every influence the land grant railroad companies could bring to bear and, he knows, too, that Gov. Bagley, by personal conversation among the members, aided materially in securing its passage—that he certainly was active upon the part of the executive branch of the State Government, touching pro-ing legislation. The bill was finally passed by 51 affirmative votes—only three more than was absolutely necessary—which shows that the friends of the Railroad Companies were very near defeating it—and after its passage by the Senate, when it necessarily had little opposition, Gov. Bagley's signature made it a law.

In this case railroad lands were taxed, but the Railroad Companies resisted the collection of the taxes, and on very few but they should, for they caused several valuable areas throughout the southern portions of the State, and the taxes aggregate a gratuity, via, the payment of which fact worked in evil. And for the first time the magnitude of the burden thereof—for lands in the hands of many—had been considered that the Railroad Companies enjoying Eng. with their money the best wood-land in the Continent, would demand as forbidden the operation of the law. A war suit was commenced with a great display of brass but Gov. Bagley's moral courage did not flinch. Knowing the support of the Legislature and people behind him he placed a bold front to the enemy—finally to be found—as from the Attorney General of the State, 31st case was filed in the U. S. District Court at Detroit, and decided against the railroad companies. That appealed, and it was finally brought to a hearing in the United States Supreme Court—the highest judicial tribunal in America. Gov. Bagley showed his opponents in the case by attending the court, not only in Detroit, but in Washington, and arguing it in the moral support of his personal presence and interesting and when the Supreme Court finally pronounced that the law must stand—that railroad companies can not defeat—their legitimate taxes—the old Sentinel's people drew a long breath of relief, and said to Gov. Bagley, well done, good and faithful servant. And now, when the disappointed lesser ot it say the Sentinel does not recognize Gov. Bagley's services to Michigan, we say that we do, and we are glad to see that the Democratic State Convention is to be represented upon the ticket by a man who will be a credit to the party, and to the State. Bay-city has justly complimented Gov. Bagley's services by electing him to the post of Mayor of that city, and Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, DEC. 31, 1872.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

—There are but few points in the bay of State of Michigan, which is now naturally situated as a grain center than Charlevoix. A large scope of unsurpassed farming land, naturally tributary to this point is becoming noted for the bulk and quality of its grain yield. This fact makes Charlevoix a first class opening for a flouring-mill. In addition to the excellent facilities for receiving grain, opportunities for marketing flour are unsurpassed. Charlevoix wants a flouring-mill and must have one.

—The secret work of Odd Fellowship was very materially changed at the last session of the sovereign grand lodge, and special sessions of the grand lodge of Michigan are to be held in the different parts of the state during the present month, for the purpose of imparting the work to subordinate lodges. The new work will be in force from and after January 1, 1873, and all other will be recognized after that date. James E. Wood and Geo. W. Crozier, Past Grands of Round Lake Lodge, of this village, leave here the 27th for Ionia City to receive the new work for their lodge.

—The Grand Traverse Herald has authority for stating that Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City have purchased the propeller E. N. Paxton, and will put her on Grand Traverse bay. The Paxton is a boat about the same size as the City of Grand Rapids and much like it in general appearance. It will be entirely refitted and put in elegant shape. It carries a strong, compound engine and is a rapid and handsome boat. The line will be from Traverse City to Mackinac, daily, one boat leaving each of the above named points every morning during the Mackinac season, making the entire run by daylight, stopping at the principal points. This line will do the passenger business for the G. R. & I. railroad between Petoskey and Mackinac.

—Work on the furnace progresses satisfactorily. The hot blast, which partially caved in last week, is being repaired, steam is kept in one of the large boilers, so that on the occasion of our visit Tuesday, we had the pleasure of seeing the large engine work. The coal kilns are being filled, and several of them have already been fired. It is the intention of the company to build sixteen more kilns next spring, having a capacity of fifty cords each. The 15th day of February has been decided upon as the day on which the furnace will "blow in" and the first iron will undoubtedly be made on the following day. Mr. Sprong, the general Superintendent of the works, is on the ground to remain and will hereafter have the entire supervision of the company's affairs here. His family will remove here next spring.

—The little Traverse Independent has the following about Cross Village: Several responsible parties are busily engaged getting out logs, wood and ties, five well stocked stores are in full blast, the American House and the Cross Village House are both doing a good business and in short the once quiet old Indian town is enjoying a business boom. When the State road to Cheboygan is opened it will bring to the village the trade of a large section of country, and be a great benefit, both to the town and to the settlers. One great draw back to the place is the fact that the lands in the immediate vicinity are owned by parties who never improve them themselves nor sell to those who will. Under the present influence of mortgages, however, a remedy is being provided for this fault, and when these beautiful lands are settled upon the convent village will have ample agricultural support.

The war department has estimated $1,189,000 to be expended for river and harbor improvements in this state during 1873. The money is to be divided as follows: Harbor and river at Au Sable, $12,000; harbor at Charlevoix, $50,000; harbor at Cheboygan, $20,000; harbor at Frankfort, $20,000; harbor at Grand Haven, $200,000; harbor at Black Lake, $70,000; harbor of refuge at Grand Marais, $80,000; harbor of refuge at Lake Huron, $100,000, harbor at Ludington, $30,000; harbor at Manistee, $11,000; Manistique harbor, $1,000; harbor at Monroe, $5,000; harbor at Muskegon, $30,000; harbor at Ontonagon, $20,000; harbor at Pentwater, $20,000; harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, $150,000; river and harbor at St. Joseph, $33,000; harbor at Saugatuck, $20,000; Sebewaing harbor, $7,000; harbor at South Haven, $20,000; harbor at White River, $30,000; Detroit river, $125,000; Saginaw river, $12,000; St. Clair Flats, $5,000; St. Mary's river at St. Mary's Falls canal, $350,000.

Some Democrats claim that a change of less than 11,000 votes in New York would have elected Hancock. By no means. Such a change would simply have helped the Southern States to steal the government.

Historic Society.

At a meeting of the Charlevoix Historic Society called by the president, Hon. John S. Bliven, to meet at the residence of the librarian, Miss Esther Butters, at 7 o'clock p. m., the following business was transacted:

The secretary, W. A. Smith, being absent with the proceedings of the previous meeting, on motion J. M. Clark was elected secretary pro tem.

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year:

On motion Rev. S. J. McIlwee was made an honorary member of the society.

Rev. S. J. McIlwee was then elected vice president.

President—Rev. A. M. Parmenter.
Secretary—I. M. Clark.
Librarian—Miss Esther Butters.
Treasurer—Miss Honor Nicholls.

The following resolutions were then adopted by the society:

Resolved, That we have a corner of the building for meeting purposes. Also that Rev. Rev. W. Ireland be elected to deliver the first lecture on the last Monday evening of December, 1872.

Resolved, That Gil Wilmot, Ed. McMahon, Rev. A. M. Parmenter and Rev. S. J. McIlwee be invited to deliver the other lectures on the last Monday evening of each quarter, provided they can be delivered on or before the first Monday evening of the months of January, February, March and April, 1873.

It was agreed to by the society to have a series of readings during the winter months, and the first reading is to be held at the residence of A. Buttars, Esq., on Monday evening, Dec. 17, at 7:30 o'clock p. m., and the time and place of holding the succeeding readings are to be appointed from time to time, as the society may determine at each reading. Bayard Taylor's Travels were chosen as the first book to be read.

Resolved, That the secretary be authorized to purchase a copy of the proceedings of this meeting, and also a copy of the above resolutions, for the editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel for publication.

On motion, the society adjourned.

J. M. CLARK, Sec'y.

A few of the recommendations of postmaster General Maynard in his annual report, are worthy of note. He favors a change in the money-order system by which sums of $5 or less can be sent for five cents, and to make up for the loss this would be to the department, he would increase the business by putting the limit of orders to $100 instead of $50. The recommendations of his predecessors as to postal savings and government control of the telegraphs are renewed, careful study of these systems in Great Britain having convinced him of their practicability and usefulness.

The present uncertain condition of the footings of the popular vote of the country, added to the certainty that the south would suppress the Republican vote unless flatly if there was occasion, "gives pause" to those who have thought that in some way a just method of electing the President by a direct vote of the people could be devised. It now looks as if the coming electoral reform must aim at a vote for President by States, on the basis of Congressional representation, properly guarded against accident and fraud by being made simple and direct.

The major generals of the army in the order of their rank are as follows: Hancock, Schofield, McDowell. The brigadiers in like order are Pope, Howard, Terry, Augur, Crook, Miles.

Kinds of Food.

All kinds of food consist chiefly of four elements, called organogens—oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen and carbon. The varieties of food, animal and vegetable, are formed by the various proportions in which these elements are combined. Animals and vegetals have nearly the same constituents. They both answer the same general purposes, but in some instances one is more nutritious than the other. Then, tissue nourishment is the various tissues, and these they furnish the blood, which is used by them in warm and less heat is needed to be generated in the body. In cold, more heat is needed than in warm. Fatal is decided into tissue-forming and heat-forming. Nitrogen is the chief element in tissue-forming the animal body, so articles containing much carbon are called carbonaceous articles of food, or heat-forming, as the fat of butter, oils, sugars and molasses. But man needs less carbon than vegetables. Health demands that we regulate the amount of carbon, fatal, and nitrogen in such way as best suits our habits of life. If this organ the have the power to use carbon in the various capillaries, we should avoid oil, sugar, fat, and other carbon food and consume chiefly cooling and mild food. Heat stimulates the organs of digestion and ultimately exhausts them. We all feel weak and languid after a hot day, and prefer fruit to meat. We instinctively avoid meat and seek for cooling, acid fruits. These latter articles of diet are sufficiently nutritious, but not so stimulating as to tasken the organs and waste the system. In winter and cold seasons of the year in frigid climates, the interpreter, and have a strong desire, and a real necessity, for meat, that may rouse the organs of digestion to greater activity and force. So we clearly see that health and strength require that our food should vary with the temperature in which we live. The same general principle applies to young children. They are sensitive and excitable. Consuming meat makes them more so, therefore they should avoid it and be limited to bread and milk, vegetables and fruits. The same general principle also appears in all young and old, who have an overly excitable nervous system. They have better health, longer life, are more agreeable companions and useful members of society, when they avoid meat and live on vegetals and grain.

The food we need depends also on the condition of the digestive organs. If they be weak, meat and concentrated food does not easily digest and gradually induce still greater weakness and ultimately some disease, as consumption or anæmia. The cause of these maladies is often improper food, and if more is nutritious and easily digested food. Exactly what food each person may need to keep himself in health and strength must be determined in part at least by personal experience. The general guiding rule must be to avoid all food that does not easily digest or distribute the organs of digestion. Likewise food is worse than none. It can not be assimilated and so enrich the blood, but irritates the food-canal and intestines. If not continued, some serious malady. Some forms of ordinary food are always to be discarded from the dietary of the dyspeptic and indolent. Masticating new and hot bread does not divide it into small pieces so that the gastric juice may come in close contact with each, but it often gives it a compact form, so that the gastric juice can reach only its outer part and so retard digestion. If not prevented by mastication and digestion. All articles of food that are rich in oils, fats and compounds are difficult to digest. We all obtain most with indigestibles in digestion. A few persons may not be able to digest the simplest food, as milk, while others can easily digest all that is ordinarily used for dissolve and fit for absorption. A mother, then, should have some knowledge of the many principles involved in properly feeding children.—Prairie Farmer.

Use of Farm Implements.

Most farmers have rollers, yet few use them much and a few, indeed at all to advantage. They are employed usually for crushing clods, with, however, little benefit generally, as they only reduce the size, while they increase the number, leaving the land harder and rougher. besides, the hardest lumps are crowded into the soil, and, when it will be dug in spring, will make the labor. The true farmer has few clods to crush: in keeping his soil in condition by work in mellow. His use of the roller is mostly for grass lands, pasture as well as mowing, and as early in the season as the ground will allow. It packs the roots well and favors a denser growth, as it avoids exposure to cold, drying winds, and thus earlier and healthier growth. In old, cold, wet meadow, in like manner, is benefited, not only by being rolled in the spring but spring and after the crop is removed, especially if a second crop is to be cut, as the surface becomes more or less roughened by the burrowing of vermin. A second rolling is not necessary with pasture, as the trampling of the stock answers the purpose. All this is of little benefit if a light roller is used, as it does not act with sufficient pressure. Double the usual amount is necessary, and for light soil is required. Lessen also the length of the roller so as to meet better the inequalities of the surface, such a roller makes short work of lumps on plowed land. and does the work of covering it—so seed more effectually.

Although the harrow has been used time out of mind, something still may be learned about it by many. Like the roller, the cut-tooth harrow is too light for covering seed, but is necessary for greater depth of loam soil; being in better respect as aid to the cultivator, finishing what that implement began, and thoroughly thus deepening the soil. Next to covering grain its best use is to relieving the roughness and lumps of the soil, usually occasioned by plowing when too moist. If this implement, as of the roller, is a rain should precede its use. The wonder is that this point is so much disregarded, considering its importance. Supplies to all tions of uses, are last fitted to produce health, strength and activity. A certain soil is land adapted to digestion. So this; highly concentrated food is often not easily digested, and concentrated foods, to render it easy of digestion, a large per cent, in bulk of innutritious food. Thus the bulk and weight of the stomach is the stomach organs, as the stomach and intestines, to greater activity. Potatoes, turnips and other vegetals contain but a small amount of nourishment and still they are very useful articles of food by way of diluting meat. Unrefined meal has more nutritious substance, more bulk than fine flour. The more nutritious food is divided, the easier the gastric fluid comes in contact with its particles and the more easily it is digested. The value of food does not depend upon the amount of nourishment it actually contains but upon the amount of nourishment that is so soluble that it can be absorbed and enter the veins. The most digestible kinds of meat or vegetals are the most nutritious.

The proportions of the tissue-making food and the heat-making food must depend upon the peculiar condition of each person, and very much upon upon the occupation and the kind and amount of exercise, but most of all upon temperature. In hot temperature the body does not need to generate much if any heat. His air is diluted air, and so contains less oxygen to burn the waste, or carbon in the various capillaries. So we should avoid oil, sugar, fat, and other carbon food and consume chiefly cooling and mild food. Heat stimulates the organs of digestion and ultimately exhausts them. We all feel weak and languid after a hot days and prefer fruit to meat. We instinctively avoid meat and seek for cooling, acid fruits. These latter articles of diet are sufficiently nutritious, but not so stimulating as to tasken the organs and waste the system. —A lung is considered loud.

—Marietta, Ga., has had a shower of hot stones.

—Twelve hundred cats daily cross the St. Louis bridge.

—A funeral procession in East Machias, Me., while returning from the cemetery last election day, was stopped by a caucus, who wanted the use of the dead man to get out and vote, but they refused.

—General Garfield, who is forty-nine years old, is, with the exceptions of Thomas Paine and General Grant, the youngest man ever elected President of the United States. The average President at the time of inauguration has been fifty-seven years.

—There is a movement in India to abolish the seclusion of Hindoo women and have them brought into society in the European fashion, but it is opposed by the native papers on the ground that the young Hindoos are not mind enough to associate with unmarried women of their own race.

—There have been several serious railroad accidents in Germany lately. It is estimated that since the Government has been running the railroads it has, for economy, so reduced the staff that the employees cannot exercise the due vigilance the baggarly account which the election returns show to their credit. It may well ask where all their votes have gone. Of course, the ready reply of Kelly and his colleagues is clear as that the wicked Republicans have resorted to a general system of colonization, and that the Democrats have been swamped by illegal importations from other States. This is what Mr. Kelly said was the matter with Indiana in the October election. We shall see on election day, this year, if the Democrats. As we have seen, Vermont has done its own, in spite of the departure of "hordes" from the slums of the Green Mountains to vote in New York and Indiana, they have been left at home to increase the Republican majority from 28,836 (which it was in 1876) to 27,000 this year. And the same is true of Pennsylvania, whence, we are told, one entire Republican "county sent" in hordes. Against a majority of 3,877 for Hoyt in 1876, we find one of 37,341 for Garfield this year. And Massachusetts, another of the States supposed to be able and willing to furnish Republican colonists to all applicants, has given Garfield a majority of 19,000 lady's gentle remonstrance, however, had no effect upon those amiable persons, who murmuringly declined to depart. So stronger measures were tried, and under dire threats from the Republican executive. On one occasion he took 836,000 from a party of coal sharpers in three days. He was somewhat skilful in handling cards and invented several of the swindling devices still used by the Democrats. At length he renounced his evil ways, restored a great deal of money to men whom he had robbed and spent the rest of his fortune in the advocacy of laws against gambling. The statutes on the subject in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Ohio were largely passed through his exertions. In letters and books he described the means by which he had won, but this active while failed to yield him a living. His family is now supported by charity.

The Democratic Drought.

There seems to be a great scarcity of Democrats this year. Immediately after the Indiana election, the Times called attention to this fact. While Mr. John Kelly was vainly casting for the explanation of that immaculate defeat, and preparing a soft place on which to fall in Governing, he was reminded in these columns that his party needed votes more than anything else. It is true that the deal man to get out and vote, but they refused.

The Fool in a Kortar.

"Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, saith the proverb of Solomon, "yet will not his foolishness depart from him."

The Democratic Fool has been brayed in a mortar pretty constantly for the last twenty years, and the Scripture is fulfilled for his foolishness shows no signs of going out. He was brayed in an unpalatable powder in the years of the rebellion, but refused to be reconstructed without additional thumps of the pestle. When some of the State elections turned toward the Democratic. In 1874, he had not sense enough to take advantage of them, and hold his ground by clever behavior, but at once blundered all that had been gained by luck; and when the Presidential contest in 1876 had given him a pretext for raising the cry of fraud against his opponents, the Democratic fool came down upon him again, in the shape of rioting disorder, and imperilled the very peace of existence. Not content with that experience, he, in the same year, crashed his head in the mortar in the shape of an extra session of Congress, for the express purpose of repealing the Federal election laws, which were intended to preserve the freedom and purity of the ballot, and again the pestle descended upon the fool's head in Presidential vetoes and the decision of the whole country. Now, he has had learned wisdom in that dear school of experience which will keep him from the pestle's reach, will learn in no other, and some of them expected to see him go through the process of boiling and sink in the depths of his sad delusion. He will do what he can to bind together the "solid South," in the hope that the Democratic party on the right road to glory, and there is nothing to be increased or forgotten.

If not inconsistent with the existence of the Democratic party Republicans may ask, "how it became possessed of some grains of sense. Honesty they do not. Always expert in the use of stupidity, they are tired of. It is not pleasant to wage an everlasting contest against the charges of bribery on both sides, and forgeries that put them under obligation to the penitentiary, and opponents who call the criminal courts democratic "principles," whatever they are. They are ready to discuss; Democratic platforms they are ready to sit down on; Democratic reconstruction they are willing to love, honor, and, if necessary, obey; but the Democratic Fool they abhor. There has been too much of him. Let him retire, and, if Messrs. Barnum, and Hewitt, and Hampton, and Randall, and Rosecrans, and the rest, do not object to such a holiday, then let him sleep with his fathers.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Emancipation of Man.

She looked just like that kind of a woman when she came into the sanctum and all the sunbeams became instinctively very busy and so absorbed in their work that they did not see her, which left the youngest man on the staff an easy prey, for he looked at the visitor with a little natural politeness, and was even soft enough to offer her a chair.

"You are the editor?" she said, in a deep, bass voice.

He tried to say "Yes" so that she could hear him, while his colleagues in the sanctum couldn't, but it was a failure, for the woman gave him dead away in a minute.

"You are?" she shouted. "Then listen to me. Look at me; what am I?"

The foolish youngest man look at her timidly and ventured to say, in a feeble voice, that she looked to be about forty-two.

"Nursling," she shrieked, "had you the soulful eyes of a freeman you could see nothing in my brow the rising light of a brighter day."

"Could I?" asked the youngest man, timidly.

"Yes, you can do it," the woman said, in tones of unmeasurable scorn. "Now hear me, and then I will proceed to bury myself in you the baneful expression in the eyes of mankind when confronted by one anybody's husband?"

The youngest man blushed bitterly, and said that he wasn't as yet, but he had some hopes.

"And you expect your—that is, you expect the woman whose husband you will be to support you?"

The youngest man blushed more keenly than before and tremblingly admitted that he had never speculated on that—that that the only daughter of his proposed father-in-law, if he might put it that way.

"Yah!" snarled the woman; "now let me tell you that the whole system of emancipation is at fraud. From this time we are free, forever! You must look for other game than our daughters before your majesties and wait upon you like slaves. Do you see any change in your affairs since we have ceased to be your servants? Is your wife more attentive to your wants? Does she mend your shirts now?" she added fiercely.

The youngest man was puzzled what a tailor on Jefferson Street made his.

"Hah," said the woman, somewhat disconcerted. "Well, she will soon learn them!" she added, triumphantly.

"A Chinaman just west of Fifth Street," the youngest man said, with a beautiful light in its eyes.

The woman grew pale and groaned under her breath, but she came at him again and

"Proud worm, who rooks your vicinals?"

The youngest man said truly that he didn't know the name of the cook at his restaurant, but he was a man of forty years old, and round as a barrel with whiskers like the stuffing of a sofa.

The woman groaned that she was going to strike him.

"Well," she said, as one who was leading a forelorn hope, "who makes up your bed and takes care of your linen?"

The youngest man replied with an air of truth and frankness that he roomed with a railroad conductor, and an Italian sleeping-car porter took care of their linen.

She paused when she reached the door, and looked back at him with a face of a drowning man who is only five feet away from a life buoy.

"Miserable dependent," she cried, "who sews on your buttons?"

The youngest man on the staff rose to his feet with a proud, happy look on his face.

"Haven't a sewed button on a single clothes," he cried, triumphantly; "patronize every one of them himself, and supplier rivets and nothing but studs and cellar buttons on my shirts. Haven't had a button sewed on for three years. Parent buttons last for years after the garments have gone to the rear."

And the woman fled down the winding passage and the light of freedom fell upon the youngest man and consecrated him upon the emancipation of his sex.—Burlington Free Press.

A Blind Boy's Ingenious Work.

We have been shown a very interesting specimen of the work that can be done by the blind. It consists of the memorials of a soldier-sailor who died in the service of his country. —Molasses Pudding.—Six ounces suet, three-quarters pound flour, half pound stoned raisins, one tablespoonful sugar, one pint of molasses, half pint of milk. Mix as stiff as possible and boil four hours.

—Cream Potatoes.—Pare and cut the potatoes into small spirals or rounds, and, twenty minutes or boiling water and a little salt. Turn this off, add a couple of milk, and, when the bubbles rise to the surface, remove from the fire, season with butter, and pour out.

—Stubborn washed in hot water or in sour-suds, or with a brush, will look dingy when dry, and soon crack and peel off; but when always washed in lukewarm water with a piece of soft old flannel, and wiped perfectly dry on a clean towel, will remain their young looks down to old age; and it greatly improves their appearance to rub them with a little warm water. Skimmilk, if too sour, or just turning, is excellent for this work on black cloth look as if varnished. Neither soap, hot water, nor brush should ever be used on it.

—Pork Pie.—Two pounds fresh pork, one pound lard, two pounds flour, two eggs, salt and pepper to taste. Season the meat well; then mix flour into it with a little salt and lard, and work into a very smooth, divisible it, and form each piece into a ball, gradually working a hollow in the middle, and filling it with ten or three inches high all round, which ready roll out to the thickness of a half inch, fill each pie, season highly, fix a cover of paste neatly over the top, and bake in a moderate oven for an hour. Make a hole in the top of an egg; and bake a light brown in a steady heat for one hour and a half.

—Contrary to the old idea, winter with the farmer is the season which requires the most diligence. Nearly every stock should not be neglected, since within two months or so they will be turned loose in the spring. Some change in your affairs since we have ceased to be your servants? Is your wife more attentive to your wants? Does she mend your shirts now?" she added fiercely.

The youngest man was puzzled what a tailor on Jefferson Street made his.

"Hah," said the woman, somewhat disconcerted. "Well, she will soon learn them!" she added, triumphantly.

"A Chinaman just west of Fifth Street," the youngest man said, with a beautiful light in its eyes.

The woman groaned under her breath, but she came at him again and

"Proud worm, who rooks your vicinals?"

The youngest man said truly that he didn't know the name of the cook at his restaurant, but he was a man of forty years old, and round as a barrel with whiskers like the stuffing of a sofa.

The woman groaned that she was going to strike him.

"Well," she said, as one who was leading a forelorn hope, "who makes up your bed and takes care of your linen?"

The youngest man replied with an air of truth and frankness that he roomed with a railroad conductor, and an Italian sleeping-car porter took care of their linen.

She paused when she reached the door, and looked back at him with a face of a drowning man who is only five feet away from a life buoy.

"Miserable dependent," she cried, "who sews on your buttons?"

The youngest man on the staff rose to his feet with a proud, happy look on his face.

"Haven't a sewed button on a single clothes," he cried, triumphantly; "patronize every one of them himself, and supplier rivets and nothing but studs and cellar buttons on my shirts. Haven't had a button sewed on for three years. Parent buttons last for years after the garments have gone to the rear."

And the woman fled down the winding passage and the light of freedom fell upon the youngest man and consecrated him upon the emancipation of his sex.—Burlington Free Press.

A Blind Boy's Ingenious Work.

We have been shown a very interesting specimen of the work that can be done by the blind. It consists of the memorials of a soldier-sailor who died in the service of his country. The blind boy had learned wisdom in that dear school of experience which will keep him from the pestle's reach, will learn in no other, and some of them expected to see him go through the process of boiling and sink in the depths of his sad delusion. He will do what he can to bind together the "solid South," in the hope that the Democratic party on the right road to glory, and there is nothing to be increased or forgotten.

If not inconsistent with the existence of the Democratic party Republicans may ask, "how it became possessed of some grains of sense. Honesty they do not. Always expert in the use of stupidity, they are tired of. It is not pleasant to wage an everlasting contest against the charges of bribery on both sides, and forgeries that put them under obligation to the penitentiary, and opponents who call the criminal courts democratic "principles," whatever they are. They are ready to discuss; Democratic platforms they are ready to sit down on; Democratic reconstruction they are willing to love, honor, and, if necessary, obey; but the Democratic Fool they abhor. There has been too much of him. Let him retire, and, if Messrs. Barnum, and Hewitt, and Hampton, and Randall, and Rosecrans, and the rest, do not object to such a holiday, then let him sleep with his fathers.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

In 1295 Legate calculated that there were in France 79,000 monks and 80,000 nuns. The number of monks is now far behind what it was a century ago, but the number of nuns is considerably above it. Eighty-six different orders of monks are represented in France, and they have 2,026 establishments: 281 different orders of nuns are represented, and they have 12,661 establishments. Seventy-five per cent. of the monks and sixty-five per cent. of the nuns are engaged in education; two per cent. of the monks and twenty-two per cent. of the nuns are engaged in attending on the sick, and twenty-five per cent. of the monks and eight per cent. of the nuns are devoted to a purely contemplative life. The Barnabites, who have just been expelled, are one of the smallest of the religious orders in France; they have only three establishments with twenty-five members between them. The largest order is that of the Christian Brothers, who number 9,568, and have since increased largely since 1865, when they numbered 6,300.

Count Drohojowski, a youthful Polish patrician of Lemberg, was entertaining a select circle at a game of cards at a card party, and, while his attention was riveted on the game, had the misfortune to have his left ear bitten off by the strains of a horrid organ, played by a peripatetic Italian who had contrived to enter the courtyard of the house in the hope of earning a few kreutzers. Moved to ungovernable indignation by this intrusion upon his privacy, the Count, seizing a basket of fruit lying piece from his gun-rack, threw upon the window, and, taking deliberate aim at the unfortunate grinder, fired. The ensuing shot him in the neck. The old man, severely wounded, succeeded in pistol on a stretcher, and the noble marksman resumed his game; but, greatly to his astonishment and disgust, was presently arrested by the police and conducted to the guard-house, there awaiting his trial for murderous assault.

Mr. Lanctin, husband of the famous "Jersey Lily," is coming to the United States next season, and it is said that he will bring his matrimonial partner along. We hope so, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, for we want the comedienne to appear in the Lily play which is to be produced in this city next season. The probability is that the next New York hotel fire would stop in would produce two Lillies, and the resulting confusion and the bankruptcy of the professional beauties of London.

SITTING Bull is dwelling in Fort Buford to surrender.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal figures out Garfield's official plurality over Hancock at 6,950.

HEWITT is engaged in the work of perfecting a plan for the reorganization of the New York Democracy, in which his knowledge of Chinese letter forgeries must be of eminent service to him.

THE Pall Mall Gazette remarks that "Grant, from three personal points of view, and worked for his party during the late election with a loyalty that channel some of his own supporters."

SIR EDWARD THORNTON, who has been the British minister at Washington since 1868, during Andy Johnson's administration, will be transferred, it is reported, to the court of St. Petersburg.

THE New York Times publishes an interview had with Gen. Grant last spring, in which he said that whenever he urged that the Fitz John Porter case should be reopened, he would shut urge the hanging of Porter.

THE Democracy of New York city is now divided into four branches, each resolving in convention that the other three caused all the late disasters to their party, and that, Reform being necessary, they will go right to work at it.

THE situation of the next Congress will be called at once to the existence of polygamy in the United States. Mr. Allen G. Campbell who opposed Hon. Q. Cannon as delegate to Congress from Utah, will contest the latter's seat on the ground that Cannon is ineligible, being a polygamist. Mr. Campbell has the law on his side, has means, and has a pile of grit. Now we will see who wins.

THE Eaton, Ga., Messenger has come to this very sensible conclusion, which should be carried at once into practice: "The south tried to whip the north in war, and failed. The south tried to whip the north in politics, and failed. There is one infallible way by which the south may whip the north, and that is by building manufactories and supply the wants of the southern people at home. No blood need be shed in this fight. Not a drop. The south may have a bloodless, but an effectual victory.

AFTER a partial sleep of some years, the Great Eastern has been fitted up for a company called "The Great Eastern Fish and Meat Company," with a capital of $1,500,000, which proposes to bring carcasses from both North and South America, and to this end the steamship Great Eastern has been refitted with refrigerating appliances for the purposes designated. The greatest steamer has a history connected with the laying of the submarine telegraph cables in the Atlantic Ocean, in which capacity she excelled all others.

THE Chippewa County News published at Sault Ste. Marie, wakes up the echoes of the upper portion of the state by a long and loud hurra for Harry W. Seymour for the speakership of the State House of Representatives. The said short consists of a good biography, and a sum for locality, peculiar qualifications, such as "a quick active mind, large executive ability, a thorough parliamentarian, excellent judgement of men and measures," etc., etc., and last but not least, his election by 310 majority in an heretofore strong democrat district. Mr. Moffatt will be the man, gentlemen.

IT is cruel to fraudulently lighten the circulating coins of the United States by punching holes in them or otherwise, and yet a great many of these punctured and mutilated coins are in circulation. The government will not receive them at the postoffice or elsewhere, the banks also reject them, and it is about time that all merchants and other people began to follow their example. Sometime it will be made an offense to attempt to pass mutilated, but until it is, mutilated coin should be refused by every one. If some soon act like this is not speedily adopted, the country will be flooded with light weight silver, which, because of its being mutilated, will have nothing but bullion value.

THE man is going the rounds of the papers, just as general. "The Mormon girls have formed a society, the members of which take a vow to marry no man who will not pledge himself to be content with one wife. Five granddaughters of Brigham Young have joined it." That sounds well and sounds nice, but it happens that the luscious scratches who run the Mormon church got hold of that knife alliance and broke it all to smash, making the girls promise never to vote such vows again. How much longer will the United States government allow that festering excrescence upon its fair name to exist? Is there not some way to do away with polygamy in that community? Or are those people so strong our shotgun policy does not cross swords with them?

SENATOR THURMAN tells a contemporaneous that he hopes to see himself succeeded by Mr. Sherman; that the latter deserves the place and is needed there.

RICH in Michigan! cultured, educated, enlightened Michigan! there are inspectors of election who don't seem to know enough to make out their returns correctly, when all instructions are given; and many printers who don't know enough to spell a man's name correctly when they have a printed copy to spell it from. Thousands of votes have been lost in this State by such blunders this fall. Michigan is, after all, the model Republican State of the Union. The party was originally organized in that State, in 1854, and never since then has she elected a State officer who was not a Republican, nor failed to give her electoral vote to the Republican candidate for President; and never since then has either branch of her State Legislature been other than Republican. And in 1880 her Republican vote and majority are greater than ever before.—Chicago Journal.

WE pity the oppressed in whatever land they may be or whatever nation they may speak. The people of Ireland extend today the most oppressed of any in the civilized portion of God's green earth, and we doubt if any of the bulldozing states can furnish an example of greater despotism. For generations has the cruel heel of the English tyrant stamped out the ambition and manhood of the poor people of Ireland. She has held her iron grip upon the throat of every soul born of Irish parents on that island, and like the hideous rubber, only under the guise of humanity, has she demanded every cent that could be produced over and above enough for bare existence. She has disarmed her sons to prevent and forced her daughters to deeds of shame, and all in the name of Christianity, and while sailing under the banner of progression and civilization. It is time England abolished slavery in Ireland. Slavery, we say, for though it is not the same species which existed in the southern states, and does not include the sales, human beings, yet it is none the less slavery, and none the less cruel and oppressive, and a thousand times more shameless, for England pretends to be one of the liberal, progressive nations of the earth. It will do no good for Ireland to show her feelings in riots, or attempt to resist the armed forces of her oppressor; but all the nations of the earth should join in protest against the treatment she has received and is receiving. Even as England protested and threatened before Bulgaria, while the nations of the earth stood appallingly by, even so should the United States, whose people shook off that same despotic heel, arise and tell her mother country that such oppression was not tolerable in these times of freedom. Other nations would surely join her and England would not dare to ignore them. Poor, oppressed Ireland today piteously appeals for help in vain to all the nations of this earth. Will none of them respond to her prayers?

FUN AT A FUNERAL.

A Political Corpse Recalls the Glimpses of the Moon and Makes a Speech at His Own Wake

The late Republican victory was celebrated at Council Bluffs, Iowa, by a grand banquet. Among those who happened to be present was one L. B. Cake, a young Democratic lawyer. After several speeches and amid the prevalent good feeling, he was called on for a speech, and responded as follows:

FELLOW CITIZENS:—A man usually attends his own funeral, but it is not expected that he should talk a great deal. I knew the funeral ceremonies would go on without me, so I concluded I would bring in the body. But it takes a great deal of grace to sustain a man who helps to furnish the corpse for an occasion like this. [Laughter.] Nobody but a Democrat could do it. It is certain that no one save a Democrat has had a chance to try it for the last twenty years. Disappointment is the southern Democratic birthright, and mourning his normal condition; they took out a patent on disaster twenty years ago, and it has never been infringed. The patent ran out in 1876 and they have just got it renewed. [Applause.] Looking over the landscape of the last twenty years I behold acres and acres of busted hopes, cords and cords of disgruntled ambitions, barrels and barrels of unavailing tears, oceans and oceans strewn with the wreck of plantation ships now barnacled with and manacled of the good people of Ireland. She has laid her iron grip upon the throat of every soul born of Irish parents on that island, and like the hideous rubber, only under the guise of humanity, has she demanded every cent that could be produced over and above enough for bare existence. She has disarmed her sons to prevent and forced her daughters to deeds of shame, and all in the name of Christianity, and while sailing under the banner of progression and civilization. It is time England abolished slavery in Ireland. Slavery, we say, for though it is not the same species which existed in the southern states, and does not include the sales, human beings, yet it is none the less slavery, and none the less cruel and oppressive, and a thousand times more shameless, for England pretends to be one of the liberal, progressive nations of the earth. It will do no good for Ireland to show her feelings in riots, or attempt to resist the armed forces of her oppressor; but all the nations of the earth should join in protest against the treatment she has received and is receiving. Even as England protested and threatened before Bulgaria, while the nations of the earth stood appallingly by, even so should the United States, whose people shook off that same despotic heel, arise and tell her mother country that such oppression was not tolerable in these times of freedom. Other nations would surely join her and England would not dare to ignore them. Poor, oppressed Ireland today piteously appeals for help in vain to all the nations of this earth. Will none of them respond to her prayers?

SENATOR T. W. FERRY'S name has been mentioned in connection with the office of Postmaster General in President Garfield's Cabinet. Mr. Ferry's general abilities, together with his large experience as chairman of the Senate committee on postoffices and post-roads, admirably qualify him for the position.

R. H. MORRISON, the alleged defaulting ex-treasurer of the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of Michigan is now sojourning in Scotland. He was born in that country.

The Climate of Michigan.

At a meeting of the State Horticultural society held in Ann Arbor last week, Prof. Winchell, of the Michigan University, read an able paper on the climate of Michigan, showing the influence the vast bodies of water surrounding the state had upon the climate, of which we give the following report from the Post and Tribune:

He demonstrated that there was not one physical characteristic of our state which confers any peculiar advantage over other states, and that is our exceptional climate —exceptional to the great advantage of both agricultural and horticultural capabilities. Dr. Winchell spoke of the reasons and time when his attention was first drawn to the climatology of the state, and and his consequent labors in that channel as well as his endeavors to obtain some pecuniary help from the state Legislature. He spoke of the incredulity with which his astonishing facts were at first received by scientists and their subsequent confirmation. "Our state is also a climate journals, and yet extended observation shows that our climate in its seasonal means is a patch taken from the latitude of Ohio, while in the moderation of its extremes it bears an analogy to the Floridian peninsula. Its boundaries are cut off from the climate of Wisconsin and Ohio by barriers as real and abrupt as the territorial boundaries. The immense area of Lake Michigan, containing 3,000 cubic miles of water, maintains a comparatively even temperature; this, of course, exerts an immense influence in equalizing the the temperature and depriving it of extremes. When the temperature of the land sinks to 20 or 30 degrees that of the lakes is 60 or 70 degrees higher, and the vapor which ascends from the surface is the literal similitude of the steam rising from a kittle heated over a domestic fire. The other factor in our peninsula climate is the prevailing direction of the wind. Should the air remain a perpetual calm the state would be but feebly warmed by the contiguous lake, but by the breeze sweeping over the lake surface they bring its warmer air to the land in winter, and raise the temperature of all the surrounding states as shown by isothermal charts. But we know the prevailing direction of such winds is from the west; therefore Michigan is of necessity the state most benefited. It is shown by statistics also, that the eastern shore of the lake during the month of May is exempt from the retarding influence of chilly western winds. This unique arrangement seems to have been prompted by a beneficent regard for the interests of early vegetation on our side of the lake. Westerly winds come to predominate only when they cease to be benefitial to the state. Nor is this benefit confined to the lake borders, but extends a modified influence throughout the state. The Huron peninsula lies in the bay of Saginaw Bay, and is thus a second Michigan in climate. Thus in our exceptional climate we possess a natural resource which ought to be studied both by the public and the private citizens; and which, utilized to the fullest extent, will enable us to produce the crops raised in the lower Ohio valley, with a more certain exemption from unseasonable frosts than is enjoyed by Kentucky, Missouri, northern Texas or the much coveted Indian territory.

THE net result of the Inter-Ocean's invitation to its readers to favor it with their views as to the next Cabinet is stated by it to be a demonstration of the facts that more people favor Gen. Grant for a Cabinet place than any other one man, that nearly as many desire to see Mr. Sherman kept in the treasury department, that almost all want a "strong" Cabinet, and that through the northwest there is a general belief that the secretary of the interior should be taken from this section.

GOV. FOSTER has withdrawn from the senatorial canvass in Ohio in a frank and gentlemanly letter, and Mr. Sherman will be chosen without opposition to fill the vacancy created by Gen. Garfield's promotion. He is, by all odds, the fittest man for the place in that state of affairs men, and Mr. Foster's graceful act will increase his popularity and prove a secret of political strength.

SHERIDAN Democrat: One of the most remarkable instances, illustrating the old adage of "kill or cure," was given by a Cheboygan patient, on his supposed death bed, last week. After being given up by the doctors in attendance, he got hold of some kerosene oil, and drank three tablespoonfuls. Strange to say, he is not dead, but fast recovering. The incident is vouched for by reliable witnesses.

Congress.

ACROSS the line surrounded in the Senate on the 13th was one by Mr. Williams to present the petitions and memorials of numerous citizens and commercial bodies of Arkansas in the Fifty-second session, the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter was amended so as to—so as to provide that when Gaines' mills the Fifth corps army against him in a following on the retired list, without pay for the time intervening since his dismissal, and was then present as the senior officer of the Army of the Potomac. Bills were introduced by Mr. Ingalls for the relief of Lieut. Gen. Bruce and Platt (republicans) and Gen. Thomas (democrat) and Admiral Porter (R.) Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to establish a military academy in the Indian Territory. Mr. Blair offered a resolution declaring that the Senate has no power to enact legislation imposing the expenditure of money for the relief of the sufferers by the Johnstown disaster. The Blair educational bill was further considered, and an amendment offered by Mr. Vance, striking out the provision which apart the proceeds of lands and patents as a portion of the fund to be distributed under the bill. Mr. Vance said he regarded the provision as a subterfuge to evade the constitutional objection. The bill further considered, and after some discussion of the question whether any person of age who cannot read and write was entitled to vote, the bill was laid aside temporarily. Mr. Blair offered a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution providing that no person who can not read and write shall be entitled to vote after the year 1903. The resolution was subsequently laid aside. Mr. Blair offered a resolution declaring that the Senate has no power to enact legislation imposing the expenditure of money for the relief of the sufferers by the Johnstown disaster. The Blair educational bill was further considered, and an amendment offered by Mr. Vance, striking out the provision which apart the proceeds of lands and patents as a portion of the fund to be distributed under the bill. Mr. Vance said he regarded the provision as a subterfuge to evade the constitutional objection. Mr. Blair replied that the provision was merely to secure the co-operation of such States as might come into the system. The bill was then laid aside temporarily. Mr. Aldrich introduced a bill to provide for the issue of certificates of deposit on the deposit of gold and silver coin and bullion. Adjourned to the 16th.

The Philosophy of Potato Cooking.

There was a time when potatoes were worth a dollar each. How could that be? The man must have been starving to pay that price! It was not only man, but thousands of men, who paid that price, and right here in California, too. They had a dominance of bread and meat (salt as a rule) and shanky; but still they were starved, and the starvation showed itself as scurvy. With scurvy at the doors potatoes were cheap at a dollar apiece. Of course this was in gold days, when agriculture was at a discount and fruit and vegetables scarce. But, this fact is a text and bears on the question of how to cook a potato. You seem to know how or is willing to take the trouble to cook a potato so as to get the real food value of it. The common idea is that a potato is three-fourths water and the rest starch; and the fallacy hides entirely the health value of the potato. To the scurvy-stricken sufferer starch is of course; he has abundance of it in his bread, his flour, or rice. A potato is in reality those fourths juice and about one-fourth starch, and it was the juice that the early Californians paid a dollar for, the juice which men of cooks throw away, serving up the less useful starch devoid of mineral and of flavor, except, perhaps, that of salt. The saccharin matters dazed not cook their potatoes to let them rise. The juice was too precious to waste the starch one did waste, for innocuous starch is almost indigestible by the human body.

Steaming is the only mode of cooking free from all objection and it is at once easy, inexpensive and economical. An improvised steamer may be made by piercing with say nine-fourth or one-half inch holes the bottom of an old tomato can, or other pared or not, as desired, paring is of course more economical in the protection of nutriment.

Heretofore two kinds of laws have been in force in this country (several of the States have for years past had statutes imposing punishment upon selfishness) guilty of adulteration, it bought not providing any special means of detection and proof. England has, for some years, maintained legislation involving a different principle—enforcement by a censorship or inspection of provisions in market and official analyses of suspected samples. In September, last March, enacted a law of this description. These laws create a public Analyst, and local inspectors, and authorize either the inspectors or municipal authorities, on giving individual purchasers to submit samples of goods in market for examination. The Analyst's report becomes evidence, in a prosecution under the law, of whatever adulteration he detects. Under this system, if you suspect your grocer of selling sanded sugar or exhausted tea, or the like, you buy a parcel, you notify the dealer that it is bought to be submitted to the public Analyst; you submit it accordingly; the Analyst finds fault with the goods you complain to a magistrate, and the dealer is arrested and brought up for trial. Upon conviction he is liable, under the English law of 1875, to a penalty of £50, or for a second offense, to six months' imprisonment. What has been found important in the enforcement of English law has been its severity. Of course a law imposing such heavy punishments must be trusted to the courts as a penal law, requiring strict construction and ought to be restricted in its clearest cases. The magistrates have entertained all sorts of technical objections and have required the most positive proof from prosecutors. In one instance where the dealer pleaded that the milk was sold as of any adulterated article "to the prejudice of the purchaser," and the dealer who was prosecuted urged that the inspector who bought the sample was not "purchasing for analysis" or examination, for he got all he wanted, which was not "to procure the lifted sum." Just as the family begin!

Bears in Pennsylvania---An Old Hunter's Talk.

From an old bear hunter of Pike County it was learned that there are more signs of bears this fall than have been known for years. Along the edges of the great swamps there is a burder of soft, black mud. These swamps are, many of them, almost impassable to man, and the bears make them their places of refuge. If bears are plenty the mud along the edges, at this season of the year, will be broken up, as it cows had been walking and stamping in it. At intervals, also, the mud will be hollowed out in spots eighteen feet long, two or three wide and two feet deep. If great patches of scrub oaks are found cracked to the ground, that is a certain indication that bears have been "working" there. They have been out feeding on the acorns. They rise upon their haunches among the scrubs and with their fore paws beat the branches down, and then walk along and eat the crop. In the autumn of the year, when bears are very fond of crickets, slugs and bugs of all kinds, and they know that their favorite feast is under their bomes in the fall under stones on the ground. Consequently, when they come where the ground is covered with stones, and turn them up to get at the bugs. Yellow jackets are in most nests, or rather their centuns, are favorite morsels with the black bear. If a bear sees a yellow jacket's nest he is working in the woods he nets like a crazy thing until he finds one to eat, one enters, or the tree or rock to which the nest of the other is secured. He prances and dances around through the woods, licking his chops and whining and growling, until his keen sense of smell leads him to the object of his search. Then he gets right down to toothless, and the yellow jackets boil out in a cloud. When the bear feels one it takes but a few sweeps of his forepaws to turn it wrong side out. The bees swarm out in clouds and cover the bear until he looks as if quilted with bees. It pays no attention to the attacks, although as sound of yellow jackets on almost any other animal would soon result in death.

The bear merely shuts his eyes and grins as he scoops the honey out with his paws and licks them all until the nest is despoiled of every trace of its sweets. The old hunter declares that he shot a big bear once in Pinebed Swamp, over in the High Knob region. He killed it, but when he went in to drag the carcass out he found that the bear had been robbing a yellow jacket's nest, and it was still covered with the fiery little insects. "If that b'ar had been wounded only, and had got away he'd died. I'd a waltzed right into it without any delay. But when once them cussed little jackets' varmints get a good jacket comm a divin' at me, I didn't want none of 'em, and I'm sure you won't afeered o' no wounded b'ar, but that yaller bear scared me out. I didn't go after that b'ar till next day."

Hornets build their nests high up in the branches of trees, or fasten them to rocks, out of the reach of harm. But, cunning as these insects are, they are no match for the bear. A bear discovers a hornet's nest far out on a limb too small to bear his weight, or high up on the breast of a rock. If the former he climbs the tree, breaks off the longest branch he can get, and, holding it by his fore paws, thrashes the nest until it drops to the ground. Sometimes a dozens or stamps on the limb until the nest is shaken off. If the nest is on a rock, the bear goes to the top of the ledge above it. Then he tears large stones and pieces of wood and rolls them down the side of the rock until one strikes the nest and sends it tumbling to the ground below. The hornets seem to know what has caused their ruin, and not one of these insects that fallen nest, but all seem to wait for the appearance of the bear, when they attack him at once.

"A hornet sting," says the old hunter, "is equal to a blow from a sledge-hammer every time, and one hornet 'll knock a bull down. But their bite won't raise a lump as big as a hornet's sting. A bear and the shaggy critter seems to think it's a handy fit. He'll stand up on his hind legs and square off with his fore paws at the hornets just as if he was bootin' with somebody, only he's darn careful to keep his eyes shut. Then he'll lay down and scrub all over the nest, while their bodies in the fall under stones on the ground. I wondered whether the parents had charged their own views, or whether the youthful mind had been guilty of this that, in the minds of her parents, mutilted her for association with her decreased brother and sister, and which made her whereabouts after death contjectures.

The grave of Captain David Hand, who died in 1826, at the age of eighty-one is in the same cemetery. He had five wives who are all sleeping near him in a row. Upon the tombstone of his third wife is the following:

Behold, ye living mortals, passing by,
How low in the embrace of death I lie;
Vast and unscrutable the ways of God;
Dare not murmur, but kiss the chastising rod.

I was told by a descendant of the family that the Captain had secured the affections of a sixth lady just previous to his death, which leaves the inference that he did not mean that the ones who had gone before were to him as a "chastening rod."

The following epitaph of a recent date lends. Bears are very fond of crickets, slugs and bugs of all kinds, and they know that their favorite feast is under their homes in the fall under stones on the ground. Consequently, when they come where the ground is covered with stones, and turn them up to get at the bugs. The Hayes Constitution Boasting over the Presidents Iowa Supporter Says:

"President Hayes prevented a rapid blunder by the awkward attempt at Southern conciliation policy. He meant well, but he found himself in the unpleasant position of a man who is trying to walk on both sides of the street at once. He could not, he has not himself greater and stronger than his party, and no President has ever been afflicted with that delusion without receiving rebuke. Take the 10 Fitzjohn Porter case. Johnson did it, and Hayes refused to follow suit. Johnson tried to conciliate the South because we had carried it, and he was a Southern man. Hayes tried to conciliate the South because we had not carried it, and he was a Northern man. He condemned his Southern conciliation policy just when it should have raised, and he was lifted with his pride and wind to the very point to launch it, and that is the first and last we hear of Hayes' conciliation policy. The appointment of a civil engineer to be minister, one who had represented in part a Democratic district in Congress, and who had been elected by the votes of the Senator in whose way it mainly stands, as the person upon the nomination of which he chose the occasion to pardon Kellogg, was a conciliation to that minister.

Hayes' conciliation policy was a failure. Instead of the South, like Johnson, meeting him half way, it would have been encouraged by that policy to continue hid the outrages in southern ports, without changing the President on their line. He could then have called his administration without reproach on the intelligence of the country, without censuring him severely for the conciliation, without censuring him severely for the conciliation, without censuring him severely for the conciliation

A Singular Melody.

MR. WILLIAM H. TERRITON, of East Springfield, whose musical talent is remarkable, has fully detailed in three columns a few years ago in how putting through the period of fruitful spasms which exist at the present day. It is now twenty years since Mr. Territon was first attacked with these convulsions. During the annual season of horrible suffering the patient was conscious of a melody somewhere in the evening entertainment with which he was afflicted. Sometimes it was a hymn tune, sometimes a popular air, and sometimes a medley of both. Frequently at several successive spasms the same song would be repeated, and then the melody would change. For two years the agony was continued, and then the melody began to change. Sometimes it was the same old tune over and over again, and sometimes it was a new air, struggled to the door of his memory. Sometimes it was a new air, struggled to the door of his memory. Sometimes it was a new air, struggled to the door of his memory.

Senator Wallace's Discovery.

The Democratic party has a mission. We wouldn't have believed it if we were not so assured by Senator William A. Wallace, who has made this remarkable discovery, and announces it through the columns of the North American because at $20 a page.

What does a timid world fancy the mission of the Democratic party to be? Perhaps a million things might be made with without hitting it. We can easily imagine how some might guess its mission to be to poke fun at the solidly Republican, to keep the South in an uproar, to defeat the operation of the Constitutional amendments, to keep John Kelly at the head of Tammany, to "respect" and "reinstate" and to "restore" the Government of the Republic to the rule of the masters of the people.

That's what Wallace says, and, though we may shut our eyes and wink at that distinguished gentleman, and, figuratively speaking, take him in the rifle and "shoot" him low, and hear, you're joking with us," Wallace means to be serious, and surprises the assembled peoples of preaching Republicanism and voting Democracy. He is a patient sufferer, who cries "I cannot see it all," and then goes on to and damns the entire country.

He is a veterinary surgeon who diagnoses upon deadly nature of the grievances and goes about inoculating the whole entire creation with the disease.

"Never plead losing game over the rapids," learned a noble hearted philosopher, "but always stick to the man with the red hand. He owns you a dollar."

Save the glorious ship of state, says Wallace, would especially the men in the engine room, who are the bearing brass in the bottom and hurrah for me."

It is all wrong, in Mr. Wallace to write a Democratic essay and attempt to palm it off as a kind of modern psalm. With issues bulking and the "standing out" process in the South, and Phipps Colonel Jeff Davis turned a traitor in the North all so fresh in our memories, Mr. Wallace can easily expect us to accept his essay seriously. We know he must be giggling merrily in front, in spite of the sombre cast of his features, at the autocracy exposed to us, and to which he so generously calls our attention in his article.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

His Soul Is Marching On.

The talent of the average Bourbon Democrat for blundering is never more conspicuously illustrated than it was in the open attack made in the Senate by Senator Vest, of Missouri, on the memory of "Old John Brown," the hero of Harper's Ferry. Senator Vest is a Democrat of small stature, but large capacity for lasting. He was nobbled in small pattern, has revolved in a narrow sphere, and mistakes his malignity for genius. He served in the Confederate Congress for two or three years, and on that bloodless field alone won his title of "Colonel," as well as his right to abuse Old John Brown. But perhaps we should say that he draws his latter right from a richer source—the indefeasible right of a Southern Democrat to make a fool of himself.

The question before the Senate was that of appropriating a sum of money to pay the Clerk of the Territorial Legislature of Kansas, in 1855, for services in the slave code enacted by a Democratic legislature. The laws never became law of the State and were publicly burned after the State was admitted to the Union. Senator Cockrell urged the allowance of the claim. Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, opposed it and explained the true character. Senator Vest jumped into the discussion, and, according to the Associated Press report, said:

"He did not propose to review the question of the right of Kansas to be admitted as a State, but he was not going to let it go by default. Such a statement as that made by the Senator from Kansas, that violence began with Missouri, was outrage perpetrated upon the people and upon all the traditions of the other States of God and morality, headed by the Democratic party. Missouri, with her people nearly exposed to crimes within their borders, had been driven to the defense of her own firesides by the lawless acts of mercenary outlaws."

It is rather late in the day for Senator Vest, of Missouri, to be attacking the memory of John Brown. If the name of Senator Vest has ever been identified or connected with any National, patriotic, humanitarian or philanthropic movement, we are not aware of the fact. Born and bred under slavery influences, he has never been other than a defender of that institution and its logical sequences. It follows, of course, that he took part in the rebellion against the Government. Relieved of his political disabilities, he has, by the grace of the Bourbon Democracy of Missouri, found a seat in the United States Senate, where he makes use of his position to attack John Brown.

Who was John Brown? A man whose shoe-latchets Senator Vest was never worthy to unloose, a man who grasped the problems of a century and the interests of posterity in the quiet of private life to absorbed the doctrines of a statesman and the ideas of a philanthropist. A born patriot, he became a developed hero. State lines and State laws, fixed in the cruelties of his great soul, left nothing but human rights, and to this idea he devoted himself and sanctioned his life. Subjected to the blasting light of his rugged intellect, slavery was simply the sum of human wrongs, and as such he attacked it. Attacking it he died a victim of an accursed system of laws, a hero of all time. John Brown's soul is marching on. His work is done. His name has been echoed in a thousand battle-songs, and will be repeated with reverence when that of Senator Vest shall have been forgotten. In view of this fact, how puerile and contemptible appears the attack of the beetle-eyed little senator from Missouri upon the memory of the hero of Harper's Ferry.—Indianapolis Journal.

A Parade of Virtue.

In the course of the debate on the resolutions concerning the Electoral count, in the House, the other day, Representative Matthews, of Indiana, declared that he believed Mr. Hayes held lawfully chosen President of the United States, and that Mr. Tilden's vote for one would seem to it that he was instigated. This is certainly very bold sense of Mr. Matthews, and we do not doubt that he was surprised and disappointed that the official report of his speech was not duly punctuated with "applause on the Republican side of the house." Mr. Matthews's remarks, unanimous utility, we are glad to say, is that of seven other prominent Democrats Senator Wade Hampton, it is well known, has boldly proclaimed his belief in the fairness of the late and legal election. This declaration, coming from a man who is vastly disposed to try the effect of a rifle club before voting any political point, was grounded by the honest Democratic people with shouts of acclamation. Senator Hill, of Georgia, also took occasion to express, with great magnanimity, his conviction that the election was fairly decided by the people of the country, and he was congratulated by the Democratic press of the South for his manly utterance. Senator Thurman, of Ohio, also took occasion to express his opinion that Hayes was duly elected, and he was applauded by the Democratic press of the country for his manly utterance. Senator Bayard, of Delaware, also took occasion to express his opinion that Hayes was duly elected, and he was applauded by the Democratic press of the country for his manly utterance. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, also took occasion to express his opinion that Hayes was duly elected, and he was applauded by the Democratic press of the country for his manly utterance. DIVISION OF TEXAS.

From the Detroit Free Press of Tuesday.

The most important question before the nation on which Congress adjourned Texas into the Union passed Congress February 28, 1845, and was signed by the President, John Tyler, the following day, only three days before the expiration of the term of office. The third clause of the second section of that resolution provides that Texas could, at any time, by giving a six months' notice, decide whether she would come in as a State or not. Finally, she was formally admitted into the Union by the Congress on the 29th of December, 1845, within the prescribed time. Texas was the largest State within the limits of the United States, and could be divided into five States, each of which would be entitled to two Senators and several Representatives. Texas has been represented in the Senate for the last four years, and can safely be said to be one of the most reliable States politically in the Union. Texas was all classed among the Southern States during the late war, and the Negroes generally turned with their masters and fought against the Union. Mr. Barrett, the U. S. Treasurer's collector, and had a brief acquaintance with the Texans, but on account of his office has seen but few of the citizens, and dropped him a card of inquiry.

A few days ago Mr. Barrett received a letter in reply from the gentleman, who by no means forgotten the matter, and letting in detail the history of the case up to the time when he proceeded to the Texas Legislature.

"OLD MACHINAW."

This is the name of a hotel which is now one hundred years old. Built at Cardoza in Pennsylvania, more than Mr. B. H. Barnes, of Saginaw, City Engraving Company, of Detroit, to Mr. Benjamin Davis Noble.

In the summer of 1877 Dr. S. B. Barrett and Dr. N. Chamberlain, of this city, were summer guests of Mackinac. On the 15th of August that gentleman, with Dr. J. R. Bennett, of Detroit, Dr. Barrett, Pa., and several gentlemen from the town started in small sail boat from Mackinac Island, and proceeded to Cheboygan. Their object was to fish for bass in the bay, and they were successful in their quest. The fish were so plentiful that they soon came to look upon the boat as a fish-net, and would swim around it in schools. The next day Mr. Bennett and Dr. Barrett had been out on the lake, and on returning to Mackinac Dr. Chamberlain joined them. The party consisted of Dr. Barrett and Mr. Bennett in the boat, and Dr. Chamberlain in a small canoe. The wind increased in Mackinac to a gale, but the distance between the two boats was not great enough to cause any danger. It happened that Mr. Barrett and Dr. Chamberlain had the two oars in the boat, and at the same time, and the Negroes gentlemen parted with their friends and the canoe at Fort Hamm. Mr. Barrett and Dr. Chamberlain's address, and had heard nothing further of the canoe, but on arriving at his office last week he found the history, and dropped him a card of inquiry.

JAY GOULD professes to believe that a great crash in the stock exchange is coming before long, with a greater panic than has ever before been known. He says that when Mr. Sherman and himself were seated on the 1st inst. Gardner in Pennsylvania, more than Mr. B. H. A PERILOUS TRIP.

The Ice in the Straits Break Up While a Party of Eight are Crossing—An Exciting Race for Life from the Chicago Tribune.

Last Monday night Representative-elect Seymour and Collector Chandler, from Saint Ste Marie, arrived in town and it was soon noised about that they had some exciting experiences in crossing the straits. Mr. Seymour pushed right through to Petoskey to make the morning train, as a Jackson reporter embraced an opportunity to secure a recital of the eventful trip from Mr. Chandler. In response to an interrogation that gentleman gave the following account of the trip which we reproduced as near as possible in his own words. "We started on St. Ignace Saturday evening, just concluded not to attempt the crossing until Monday, and not then unless the ice was unusually safe. In the evening Mr. Seymour received a telegram announcing the death of his mother at Rondout, New York. The messenger reported the ice all right and it was decided to make a start the next morning. Hardly morning brought with it a heavy cold and snow storm, and for a time the wind was strong up but Mr. Seymour was anxious to cross if possible, so it was decided to go to Jack Lodge's about four miles across the country, where the ice was to be safer, and wait for a favorable opportunity to cross. Reaching that there was some danger in crossing in such a storm of snow and wind, but as we were all anxious to cross the final decision was left to Mr. Seymour himself. When near the island the question was discussed whether we should cross directly to Mackinac Island or go around the lower end, which is square and has a good deal of ice. We could see from the island that some of our number had crossed on the ice, which was considered a safe sign. We finally decided to go around the lower end, and then cross directly to Mackinac Island

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

—Certain champions of the organization of the "county seat towns" were frank enough to admit that the dominative Township should be merged into their old boundaries after the object for which they were organized should be accomplished. Their last letter takes time by the forelock now and disparagine them. They won't bear the kind of fruit they were raised for.

—As a building to a paragraph copied from the Herald of week before last the Bird City (Kansas) says: "Replying to an exchange which made some reference to a supposed rivalry between Charlevoix and Traverse City, the Grand Traverse Herald gives expression to some manly sentiments, which every northern Michigan newspaper should endorse. It is the right spirit and feeling to foster, because, as the Herald rightly says, There is room for us all."

—James H. Devlin, of Beaver Island is in luck. The father of Mr. Devlin in 1843 purchased a lot on the corner of Desplaines and Lake streets, Chicago. He has since lived on the lot, until his death, which occurred some time ago. Our Beaver Island friend is the only heir, and recently the attorney of the estate sold the property for $35,000. The Little Traverse Republican states that Mr. Devlin will erect a residence at that place in the spring and become a resident.

—The residents of Point St. Ignace are considerably "torn up" in their minds in regard to the propriety of incorporating their future metropolis. The "furnace" interest which is in favor of one of the town would be in favor of the project provided the furnace be left out, and the "mill" interest would favor it provided the mill be left out, while the balance of the property owners favored it on consideration that both mill and furnace be taken in. The hammer element oppose the project because their opportunities for hammering might be somewhat curtailed.

—It is reported on good authority that the Boyne City Standard is no more, and that its founder and publisher has departed, "he hope not. There is nothing like bold and brilliant contrast in humanity as well as other things. During the residence of Mr. Clink in our county we could with pride point to him as the champion fool of the wolverine state. Now there is no aching void, as the belt is transferred to the county whither he of the cap and bells has gone. We could spare the Standard, but its vivacious editor leaves too large a vacuum, unless Otis comes back to fill it.

—Hon. P. Ramsey, president of Kalamazoo Village, who is a member of the Charlevoix Summer Resort, writes the editor of this paper as follows: "Kalamazoo is becoming more and more interested in the welfare of your town, and rejoices in the encouragement you have that another summer will find Charlevoix permanently established as one of the most inviting resorts in this country; with a future almost certain to make it one of the most important lake towns in Michigan. With enterprise it cannot be otherwise than that. The immense resources bordering your inland lakes will rear a city of your thriving village that Michigan will be proud of. You will excuse my enthusiasm in prefixing so favorably for your interests; that is, if I have over estimated our judgment of the same. It is barely possible, too, that your summer breezes that I have enjoyed with the hot and sultry weather in southern Michigan, together with the cordiality of your people with mosquitoes, have so infatuated me with your town that I am not well-qualified to judge well of business matters. Still I think time will fulfill all."

Furnace Jottings.

—Trade at the company's store is lively and increasing.

—The coal manufactured thus far at the furnace is of a very superior quality.

—The company talk of putting in gas to light the several buildings of their establishment.

—President Cherrie is a member of and stockholder in the Chicago Charlevoix Summer Resort.

—The machinery is run daily to date by a thorough test before starting up. Everything works capitally.

—The company are negotiating for the charter of two steam barges to transport their iron ore from Escanaba to the furnace.

—President Cherrie will visit Washington this winter, and do some work in the interest of Charlevoix harbor improvement.

—The region of the furnace resounds with the ring of axes, and teams are in good demand for hauling wood to the beach and wood yard.

—The company will build a boarding house now this winter for use in the like to accommodate men loading rouw. James Washburn has the job.

—The company has contracted with James Washburn, ship carpenter of this place, for the construction of several scows, including the boarding house scow.

—Excellent roads between Charlevoix and the furnace, but if you meet a loaded sleigh, and have to get out and left your corner into the swamp or some bank, don't swear—that is, don't swear too hard.

—The company are seriously contemplating the erection next summer of another furnace on their Pine Lake grounds, of the same size and capacity of the one just completed. Work will probably be commenced upon it early in the spring.

The Liberal Club.

To the Editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel:

The last two lectures before the Liberal Club were unusually interesting.

Mr. Bisbee, on "The Nature of Things," showed that he had given his subject a great amount of careful study, and arranged his thoughts in a manner well calculated to lead his hearers to think of and inquire into the nature of things for themselves. His remarks were but slightly criticized by the members of the club.

Mr. Hlark, on last Monday evening, held a large and respectable audience while his views were on "Organization and Intelligence." In doing so he used some very beautiful illustrations, and brought to his aid both phrenology and physiology.

At the close he was pretty sharply criticized by Col. Winser, who thought the lecture tended toward materialism. Mr. Blakes could see nothing in it that leaned toward spiritualism. Mr. Carpenter agreed with the lecturer in the main. Mr. John Bell saw nothing to criticize, and the Rev. G. W. Bell not being present during the lecture, made a few well chosen remarks on science and religion and faith and reason.

Mr. Bell is winning the good opinion of all who attend the meetings of the club by his course in taking part in the exercises, showing by his actions that he believes that truth has nothing to fear so long as it has an equal chance with error.

He lectures before the club on the evening of the 24th, on "Genesis and Geology."

All wishing to hear an able lecture on that interesting subject will do well to turn out and hear him.

The Church Lottery Question.

To the Editor of the Sentinel's station:

Will you be kind enough to allow me an explanation through your columns in behalf of the ladies of the Baptist church of this place, concerning a misrepresentation made through the Banks correspondent of your paper, about a lottery conducted at the donation recently given to the interest of the pastor of that church. We wish it to be distinctly understood that the ladies of this church had nothing to do with the management of the lottery referred to. The members of this church do not approve of the adoption of lottery schemes to make money for benevolent or any other purposes. The whole responsibility of this matter rests upon the shoulders of an individual, who, I am certain, holds no membership relation to it. We would say this, however, that if any man would prove that the lottery conducted at this donation, taken in connection with its object, was a regular lottery, such as are adopted by professed gamblers to swindle people out of money, we challenge him to a right cof resment of the law on this question, to ascertain how far that would go toward vindicating such a view. This much in the case is quite certain, that the money was gotten up out of pure motives, and should not be used to reflect upon the candor and generosity of the individual.

I am informed on good authority that the Norwood case is also misrepresented. Let us hear from that quarter

GEORGE W. BELL.

An Important Project.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says several Chicago and Buffalo capitalists, who are vessel owners, and who sailed during the best years of their lives, are agitating a project for a telegraph cable connecting the Manitous, the Fox, and Beaver Islands, at the foot of Lake Michigan, with the main land. Their plan is to form a stock company, and, inasmuch as the funds necessary will not be large, there is no doubt but that it can be carried out successfully. In stormy weather, immense fleets of steam and sail craft seek shelter at those islands, and are sometimes storm-bound there for a week at a time. There is no way of hearing from them, and the anxious relatives and friends of those on board, and shippers, consignees, and underwriters, must wait until the storm ceases, and the craft themselves make their appearance to learn of their safety. Crafts in distress outside are also often supposed to be safe at the islands, when if it was known they were not there tugs would be sent out in search of them, and perhaps save vessel, passengers and cargo. It will be remembered, as an instance, that the Alpena was supposed for several days to be lying at the Manitous in safety. If there was a cable, our shippers and vessel agents could be also notified when their steamers and vessels past, and there are numerous other ways in which this means of communication would prove beneficial and remunerative to marine and commercial interests, and to the projectors. It is to be hoped that the plan can be carried out.

—J. Milo Eaton's real estate agency has work sold the O. E. Smith residence on Main street, in this village, to Mrs. Eliza J. French, for the consideration of $400.

—There is still serious talk of the erection of a fine brick building on a part of the "Black lot," in this village, now owned by L. D. Bartholomew, with a public hall in the third story.

—We are in receipt of a very fine calendar from the Chicago paper house of Culver, Page, Hoyne & Co., through the courtesy of our friend W. D. Tomlip, an employe of the establishment.

—In our recent review of the business and industrial institutions of Charlevoix, we inadvertently omitted the Markesith establishment of Robert Miller, Esq. Mr. Miller is one of the few settlers of Charlevoix now. Mr. Miller has been a Justice of the Peace here for many years, and enjoys an enviable reputation for fairness and ability in the exercise of his official functions.

—The editor of this paper leaves today for Detroit to attend the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M. He will also visit Lansing and Big Rapids before his return. His wife and daughter accompanies him.

—John Nicholls is in receipt of a letter from her husband, mailed at Queenstown, Ireland. He states that he suffered uninterrupted sea sickness on his passage over. We shall expect to hear from him soon, more fully.

—Senator Bostwick is chairman of the committee on Public Lands, and a member of the committees on State Normal School, Fisheries, and Roads and Bridges. Representative Fraser is a member of the House committees on Public Lands, and State University.

—The Iron company have purchased the timber on forty acres of R. G. Hipp's land, near the furnace, and have a camp of twenty five choppers getting out wood. They have erected a temporary boarding house on the land, and John Symonds is landlord and overseer.

—Byron See has the plans of his store building to be erected opposite the Sentinel, building next spring. As before stated, it will be of brick, with a corner entrance, and will be finished in a very neat architectural style. The upper story will be divided up into offices.

—It will be remembered that last fall President Cherrie, of the Pine Lake Iron Company had a conference with President Hughart of the G. R. & I. R. R. Co., concerning the possibilities of a branch railroad from their main line to Charlevoix via the furnace. The inducements offered by the Iron company in amount of freight, were such that Mr. Cherrie considered the construction of a road only a matter of a few years. Now, if the plans of the Iron company are carried out, in erecting another stack, and thereby doubling the bulk of their freight, the chances for a railroad will be doubled. Add to this the very rapidly growing population of Charlevoix as a summer resort, and the consequent increase in travel hence, the prospects look very flattering. It is generally conceded that the "lay of the land" here is natural and acquired advantages, and soon bring the "iron cinews of commerce" to our doors.

—We are informed that the Michigan chemical company will erect at Elk Rapids extensive works for the manufacture of charcoal, and wood alcohol, from the smoke and gases which escapes from the 35 charcoal kilns, belonging to the Elk Rapids Iron company. The buildings will consist of a brick engine house, pump house and boiler room, a very heavy three story frame building for the tanks and condensers, a large single story evaporating house for the acetate, also a drying house with packing room attached. An alcohol house with still another apparatus for separating and refining wood alcohol, will also be built, detached from the other buildings, so as to guard against danger from fire. The daily products of these works is estimated at 15,000 pounds of acetate of lime, 160 to 200 gallons of wood alcohol, and about 30 barrels of wood tar, and will give employment to about fifty persons. The acetate is put up in gunning sacks, holding a hundred pounds each, and shipped to various points where manufacturing chemists free it from the lime, and make pure acetic acid, which is used to corrode lead for paint, also quite extensively in the manufacture of prints and for several other purposes. The acid has heretofore been made by coking wood in close retorts, holding about one cord each. The advantage of manufacturing at this point where they can use the gases which escape from the charcoal kilns is obvious. The wood alcohol is used principally in the manufacture of varnish, and such other work as requires the cutting of gum by substances. The works are to be erected so early in the spring as the weather will permit. Plans and specifications are now being prepared, and the engines and other machinery will be built, contracted and shipped here on the opening of navigation. After these works are in operation there will be no more smoke or gas arising from the kilns, which will be quite a relief to our townspeople.—Progress.

Wauseoyon dispatches state that John J. Bagley's friends are pushing him for a position on governor's council. He is certainly capable and worthy of such a position.

—Messrs. Kegler and Harsiood have gone to spend a week or so each friend at Old Mission.

—Mr. John Moore, with a team new sold, returned home from Ishpeming last week, bringing with him Mrs. Moore.

—E. W. Farley, of Charlevoix, passed through our town on Thursday. He came to a cutter, instead of the favorite rig—the snow plow.

—The cold wave struck Banks on Thursday from the north, and on Friday from the south. Two aspects to be sinned from the other two either before the week ends.

—Banks is either blessed or seriously afflicted with correspondents. The regular correspondent having had neither name nor item on the plane of humanity for months, the public made him shoulder all that the occasionals sent in. It was one of these occasionals that threw that Norwood girl, Miss Psyche Ann, into such a fearful fix. Miss Psyche, who regards it proceeded to belabor that guiltless correspondent and the people of Banks generally. Were it not for the impression produced abroad, that we were an illiterate people, we would not notice Psyche's remarks. We claim the right to explain, and set Banks and that correspondent right before our neighbors.

Give our, Ann, and mark well what we have to say in our defence. You thought you knew exactly whom you were pummeling and showing up to the public, but you were showing the wrong personage—one would give no intentional offense to any one, who sustains the highest Christian character wherever known, and has spent more years in the Methodist church than you have spent days of discretion, and from unclean conscientiousness and a keen appreciation of the eternal fitness of things would have the churches avoid even the appearance of evil—the lines so closely drawn and distinctly marked that the Judas Bonnesses may be kept out and kept of as much trouble against the church as possible.

All that was said in "Item letter" could possibly be construed into a slur against the M. E. church, or any person. We know those ladies there for what do those you volunteered your services. Banks has known them long, and knows that your services would not pander for the Judas means that actuate the Judas Bonnesses. Banks has further evidence of our town, we would say that that name of Norwood, and the proceeds thereof was but time discussed in our town, and the most we heard of the affair was from a former citizen of Norwood, and the former pastor there, who declared that that organ should not be used in his services.

There you, Ann, can't you feel a little more compassionate toward us? And wont you take back those spleeny reflections you made on a church over here, which is neither Methodist nor Baptist? And you have your reflections on reporters.

—Are you the reporter?

Huh! Psyche! can't help but laugh for you, and the whole town of Banks is shaping over with pity and compassion for you, and if you say so we'll shake hands over the chasm, and beg an invitation to the first donation supper at Norwood, to help close those historical pieces of what ever good things they may contain. And when you come to distribute those tracts, don't part your hair in the middle as I have them with the book mowed over you. Good bye, Ann.

The Cost of Fur Garments---How to Take Care of Them.

Never at any time have furs found greater favor than this season, and dealers report an unusually brisk trade. Fur borders are among the most popular of trimmings, while small sacques and furlined garments take precedence of all other wraps with ladies who can afford them. The most desirable fur and the costliest, with the exception of the Russian sable, is the fine Shetland seal. A long coat of this can be had for $400 to $450; while the stylish natural Hudson seal trimming is added to a sack for from $80 to $120. The Russian sable is almost priceless, and a small coat, with sable border, could be had in this city for a lady of Massachusetts, cost $1,000, to which a small added sum more, making the cost of the whole set $2,000. The price of a muff made to order this season by the same firm was $300, the fur being the choice of 10,000 skins.

Unless one is so wealthy as not to be obliged to consult first cost, it is a wise plan to buy a sack without thought of putting all your money in the wrap itself, and furs that are bordered may be used next season. Long sacks are the choice, ranging from thirty-five to forty inches in length, while extra full forms are made to order measure forty-eight inches or more. Dolmans are suppleness are the novelties in the shapes of these long cloaks. The graceful paletot is also made with large sleeves, with sleeves fobbed separate upward from the wrist, and terminating in a narrow cuff, and inserted high over the shoulder, giving large armholes that seem to be made for room to throw off and on as a circular. The pale, delicate gray of the native fossil, and has a wide collar, cuffs and border of some rich fur with long fleece, such as black fox, sable, or even marten or chinchilla. Such cloaks are lined with quilted and brocaded satin, and from $200 to $450. The stylish petlon of seal skin is shaped precisely like the sentiment worn with a basque, and is of white wadded chevoiders of fashion this previously—all seal skin dress.

It is all one to ever dress and cloak, requiring a very simple dress beneath it, and is the most elegant garment when worn with a pelerine cape and great cuffs of native brown marten fur; it is close fitted to the waist, single-breasted, is fastened two-thirds of the way down the centre front, and a side opening from from the waist line down the middle of the back. In a very dark suede seal coat the pile of the fur should be short and thick, so as to fall open slightly when worn, which gives a rich, velvety look to the fur. To test this turn the cloak bottom upward and notice the difference.

In regard to the care of furs, dealers say they must be kept in a cool, dry place, and must not be dried by artificial heat after having been wet by rain or snow. This is especially true of seal skin, which has its fine pile fattened, refined and curled, when dried by a fire or furnace heat. It should instead be exposed to the air of a cold room, and should be well spread out on when drying.

For fine clothes come next to seal. In these there are many shapes. The dolman, the Mantilla, with its graceful sleeves, the Lahore, and any number of circulars are shown. Broadcloth and cassie velvets are the materials used for the most elegant of such wraps, while satin de Lyon, Silliteens, armure silks and heavy gros-grains are the next choice. Ladies in deep mourning buy cloaks of woolen armure, lustrines and without trimming beyond a round collar of black fox or black lamb, or squirrel lock fur, formed of the breasts of the animal, is chosen as lining for heavy materials on account of its lightness, but the dark fur formed of the squirrel backs is richer and more durable. A circular with lining in dark Siberian squirrel ranges from $80 to $130 wholesale. The very odd thing is shown of the heads of the animal, fine sprays of the fur, deftly placed together, giving a peculiarly rich effect.

The fashionable fur of the season consists of a round collar or shoulder cape with muff to match. Such sets will be much worn this winter to complete the favorite walking dress of cloth or velvet. The small round collar, the medium large Eugenie collar, cut off square across the front, yet long enough to cover the chest; the deeper circular cape and the large stylish pelerine, covering the shoulders nearly to the waist, like a coachman's cape, are the various styles seen in new fur sets. With many of these wide sweeping cuffs are worn that are merely wide borders of fur, not draped and drawn in at the wrists with elastic, like those formerly worn. The muffs remain very small, and, indeed, are smaller than those of any winter, though a preference for larger muffs is noted in Europe. The round muff, without ornament, unless it be a border of another kind of fur, is sold by furriers indeed of the flat, long-shaped muffs that modistes make of velvet, feathers, flowers and lace, while a novel shape is a tur reticule, with pockets for both sides and ribbons to suspend it from the arm when not in active use.—Philadelphia's Times.

How to Keep Warm.

With the coming of winter weather has appeared a widespread and laudable desire on the part of the public to keep warm. Some of the means employed, sufficient clothing being among them, are eminently practical, but others equally important are greatly neglected. All the warmth that can be enjoyed out of doors is that which, created within the human system, has been prevented by appropriate clothing from getting away, so it stands to reason that the person who does not eat enough or animate an improper food, is bound to suffer from cold, no matter how many coats he wears. The best means must, whether meat consists of a sandwich or piece of pie, eaten standing, is sure to go home cold to his evening dinner, unless he has purged his empty stomach by quaffing alcoholic stimulants into its lair. No one can be comfortably warm unless he eats enough to make the requisite quantity of blood. Cleanliness also is necessary to persons who do not want to suffer from cold. Unless the skin and all other outlets of physical waste is in proper condition a great deal of the bodily heat is squandered in attempts to overcome the results of careless habits. People whose sitting-rooms or offices are never ventilated are sure to feel chilly, even if the mercury in their rooms stands at eighty degrees in an unvitiated atmosphere, six degrees cooler the same people would feel complain of cold while running down their knees. Finally, exercise is absolutely necessary. Not clothing, open fires or hot air devices can save one from discomfort in winter unless exercise is frequent and moderate enough to make heavy clothing discomforting for a few minutes.—Leavenworth Times.

Economy in Fuel.

Dr. C. W. Siemens thinks it about time that the economical use of fuel should be practiced. In small offices and mansions, as well as in large manufacturing establishments. He has invented a grate which gives out a fine heat without noxious gases into a room—a grate which is very economical which needs fairly the requirements of economy in consumption of fuel. A flow air is admitted on this grate. An iron dead plate is fitted at right angles to a stout copper plate at the back of the grate and grate and extending five inches above the bottom bars. Here the iron plate joins it. The dead plate stops short about an inch from the bottom bar of the grate and makes room for a half-inch gas pipe which is perforated with small holes arranged facing on its upper surface. This pipe rests on a lower plate bent downward toward the back so as to form a vertical air-heating flue channel of about one inch in breadth between the two plates. A trap door in the lower plate below the gas pipe serves to remove the ashes. The vertical portion of the channel contains a grid of short copper arranged like a frill and fixed next to the back. This frill of copper conducts the heat from the back and sets up a current of air in the channel, and this air forces the small gases of the perforated pipe to burn brightly. Instead of the pumice stone, the front of the grate is filled with coke or anthracite, to which the best of the gas-gas is transferred. Dr. Siemens says that he holds it almost barbarous to use raw coal for any purpose and that smoke should never exist. All coal fuel will be separated into its two constituents before reaching our factories or domestic hearths.

Cold Feet.

Very many persons do not properly care for their feet. They use cotton stockings and thin soled shoes in winter; sometimes they sit, perhaps for hours, with their feet damp and even wet. It is not unfrequent for females to go about their household work half a day in a time with feet insufficiently protected, while the cold currents of air create a temperature forty degrees less than the body. —Boston Herald.

Some people become so habituated to cold feet as not to "feel" the chill—

The keeper explained: "Joe had a cold, and that made him very low spirited."

Joe was listening attentively, and when the man had finished, he shivered his tail down to the collar of his jacket round his hairy throat, as if to contain the excitement. I gave him an apple, which he looked at a moment, then opened the door of the oven of his mouth and put it in out of sight. A LITTLE GOOSE.

Waits I'm in the room, I say from all the day I am laugh, I am funny, and I sing about and play.

But when I go to the true, I must get up with the birds,

And work, and read, and practice, from early morn till dark.

When I go to the theodore, I'll be like sister Mary,

I'll wear the newest dresses made, and may be have a beau;

I'll go to ballet parties, and wear my hair up high,

And write a bill to all the town shall be as gay as I.

When I go to the church, I'll be just like mother,

I'll be married to a splendid big man,

Fill stock and bake and mend, and spend all my days a little fast,

But sing to my babies and nice, I'll not object to that.

Oh, what many alive think? The Sister Mary, say!

When I grow up old as forty, I think I'll have to die

But the trough the world won't last until we see that day.

It's so very, very, very, very, very, far away!

THE CHIMPANZEE.

When in England I was very much interested in the monkeys at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, London. There were hundreds of all kinds and sizes from the tiny creeping thing to like creatures not much bigger than a large rat. There was one, I had a specimen glass house, heated by steam, and, as a tropical temperature was always desirable to keep the monkeys and the rest of the animals in good health, the glass house was very vigorously within its walls that I have no doubt the quaint Chinese supposed it was the home of certains like a Prince. He has his camp servants and cook retained since his army days. The butter and vegetables he uses are raised on the Senator's farm in Rhode Island.

Look Out for Your Coal Stoves.

What came near proving a great tragedy was prevented yesterday morning by the natural demands of an infant. In Thursday evening Mr. John Sandell, of Grand Island, Nebraska, and Augusta sisters, and family retired to bed at ten usual hour, the self-feeding heaters having been, as it was supposed, previously secured in the usual manner. It would appear, however, that the one in the hall above the store, which forms the chief apartments of the family, had been neglected or at all events not so arranged as to give sufficient room for the ever accumulation and escape of gas. The result was that before morning a large quantity of this life-destroying agency escaped from the stove and cute red the hall and rooms that all the inmates (eight in number) except the baby, were partly asphyxiated, and some of them, perhaps the whole, would have been suffocated to death had the latter, toward daylight, not felt a necessity for its natural nourishment, and by its efforts to obtain sustenance aroused Mrs. Sandell, who, experiencing a strange sensation, endeavored to arouse her husband and finally succeeded. Mr. A. also experienced a strange and sickening sensation on waking, and suspecting the cause, at once arose and proceeded to secure ventilation by opening the doors, and windows, and the draughts of the stove. The other inmates were then aroused, and it was found that all were affected, but the servant girl (Miss Tasbey) more than any of the rest. Indeed, so much was she injured that she fainted from the effects three or four times during the day. The other six were so unwell all the day that they could do but little or no work, and could not take but sparingly of food. This fortunately ended the matter, so far as telling the apple and bringing it out in triumph. The keeper gave him a piece, and after telling the apple cool a little, he offered it to us. We courteously declined, but the servant tasted, explaining that Joe did not like to eat anything alone. Then Joe followed, but did not like the flavor, and being asked if it was sour, he nodded. We were told that he, in common with the other monkeys, liked oranges and bananas better than any other kinds of fruits. Yet he kept tasting a little of the apple from a spoon while the keeper told us how the sailors who hoped to capture his mother only succeeded in bringing him off one after they had killed her. They had hard work to keep him alive on board ship, but found a warm nook for him by the galley fire. He was in fair health when they landed, so they thought the large price offered by the Zoological Gardens; but in spite of the most fevorial care, he seemed to pine away in his new home.

"Do you love me, Joe?" the man called his name will do. Joe nodded, smiled, and put his head lovingly on his other's shoulder.

As we left that day Joe took his bit, cane and heavy wrap, and escorted us to the great door of the monkey house, shaking our hands as we bade him good-bye.

Another time when I called, he was talking tea, using milk and sugar, and lump of the latter he put in his left hand; now he is a confirmed criminal. He did not mind his politics, did not govern his temper, and as he grew older went with bad boys, whotaught him bad habits. Sometimes he was cross and worse, until, while drunk, he killed a man and now, poor Joe, he never expects to be so honored again as to be invited by a chimpanzee.

Joe's appetite was that was feverish; I found his pulse was 120, I said, "What is the matter, Joe?"

"Consumption is what kills all of them," the man answered, in a low tone, just as if talking before a human invalid.

Again that day Joe failed rapidly, and one morning, under the head of "Great Loss," the Times announced that he was dead. Joe was the only one of the monkeys at once to see the keeper, whose grief I have not words to describe. For days, Joe could only be persuaded to take food by seeing him eat and drink. Then he put his head in the keeper's lap in his berth by his side, and when he rose at a certain hour he had brought all the last struggle. The man's voice was actually choked with sobs as he said, "Joe's dead, sir, and I'm glad of it, for I'm not to have a funeral for him. He ought to have had one."

I never heard Joe had any funeral, but I did hear that he was stuffed, and that the skin, with the other monkeys, whereupon all the old monkeys began shaking all the young ones until it seemed as if their poor little heads would drop off.

Joe was about as tall as an average boy of eight or ten years old. He were a thick cloth roundabout, and a low, flat trencher cap, such as the Oxford students wear with the fewest shirt.

One day I walked to the door of his room and knocked. He answered with "Come in," and, as I did, so Joe walked erect over the floor to me, pulled off the cap of the rolls and a bow, and put out his right to shake mine. "If I Had Minded My Parents."

I went a few weeks since into a prison, as a young man who had ever been a Sabbath-school scholar. The chaplain took a kind interest in me and led us through the long, gloomy halls, unlocked one door after another, until we finally got into the cell of a young man whom we found sitting on a low stool, with his head resting on his hands. He looked up as we came in, and I saw that he was a mere boy, not more than seventeen years old, and yet a murderer! I sat down beside him and talked with him.

"Oh," said he, as the tears rolled down his cheeks, "I did not mean to do it. I was drunk, and I struck a blow, and before I knew what I was about I killed him. Oh, if I had minded what my mother taught me, and what I had minded my parents, I should never be in this!"

It would have made your heart sore, as it did mine, to see and talk with him. He was a mere boy, and yet a murderer! Oh, how true it is a condemned criminal. He did not mind his parents, did not govern his temper, and as he grew older went with bad boys, whotaught him bad habits. Sometimes he was cross and worse, until, while drunk, he killed a man! Now, poor boy, he never expects to be so honored again as to be invited by a chimpanzee.

Joe's appetite was that was feverish; I found his pulse was 120, I said, "What is the matter, Joe?"

"Consumption is what kills all of them," the man answered, in a low tone, just as if talking before a human invalid.

Again that day Joe failed rapidly, and one morning, under the head of "Great Loss," the Times announced that he was dead. Joe was the only one of the monkeys at once to see the keeper, whose grief I have not words to describe. For days, Joe could only be persuaded to take food by seeing him eat and drink. Then he put his head in the keeper's lap in his berth by his side, and when he rose at a certain hour he had brought all the last struggle. The man's voice was actually choked with sobs as he said, "Joe's dead, sir, and I'm glad of it, for I'm not to have a funeral for him. He ought to have had one."

I never heard Joe had any funeral, but I did hear that he was stuffed, and that the skin, with the other monkeys, whereupon all the old monkeys began shaking all the young ones until it seemed as if their poor little heads would drop off.

Joe was about as tall as an average boy of eight or ten years old. He were a thick cloth roundabout, and a low, flat trencher cap, such as the Oxford students wear with the fewest shirt.

One day I walked to the door of his room and knocked. He answered with "Come in," and, as I did, so Joe walked erect over the floor to me, pulled off the cap of the rolls and a bow, and put out his right to shake mine. When I Wish remarkable nerve he looked briskly; but when I added, "Are you pretty well, Joe?" he shook his head and looked very sad. The keeper explained: "Joe had a cold, and that made him very low spirited."

Joe was listening attentively, and when the man had finished, he shivered his tail down to the collar of his jacket round his hairy throat, as if to contain the excitement. I gave him an apple, which he looked at a moment, then opened the door of the oven of his mouth and put it in out of sight. Seeming to understand that the fire was low, he pulled a basket from under the lower berth and took some bits of wood from it to the stove. Then the keeper handed him a pipe and a light. Joe lit fire so cleverly as any Yankee boy I ever saw.

"Show the lady how you read the Times, Joe," said the keeper.

Joe drew a chair, tilted it back a little, spread his legs apart, opened the sheet, turned it until he found the page he wanted, then settled himself to the exact position of the comfortable Englishman, and began to read aloud. The Times is printed for its exclusive use. It was impossible to help laughing, and the sly twinkle in his narrow eyes assured us Joe himself knew how funny it all was. Then he folded the newspaper at the open door of his room, and, as he did not like a pat his head in its pocket, drew out the one eye-glass Englishman so particularly affect, and put it to his eye, looking at us through it with a Disdainary himself. After a little while Joe grew tired of my many questions, left his chair, and quietly shut the door in their faces.

Speaking about as if he would do something more for our amusement, he produced his apple in the stove oven. Running there, he took hold of the door, but suddenly drew back, for it was hot. He laughed a little at his discomfiture, which he took in good part, stood thinking a moment, then used his pocket handkerchief as deftly as a thirsty lady would to screen pish his purpose. Next, to see if he was hot, the apple, Joe logically reasoned, must be hottest so he ventured not to touch it before opening his knife. Wondering what he was going to do, I found he was splitting the blade his which she had paid him. He refused it. She has begun a suit, and her lawyer assures her that, as she obeyed the directions in every particular she has a clear case. Memphis Ledger.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—Cut brand fine for filling for fowls; this is better than to crumble it. No sogginess.

Salt will curdle new milk, hence in preparing porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the rest of the dish is prepared.

—For general purposes on the farm, castor oil, with a little kerosene added is the best lubricator and preserver. For axes, mowers, buggies, etc., it further more pulls with less gum than most oil. The amount of kerosene, if any is to be added, must be governed by the purpose for which it is designed.

—Lemon Pudding.—One lemon grated, rind and the pulp, one cup of sugar, one cup of water or sweet milk, four eggs, three tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two table spoonfuls flour. Line a deep dish with pastry crust, pour the custard in, bake thirty minutes. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth, sweeten, spread on the top of the pudding and let it brown slightly.

—Professor Boessman gives the following as a cure for yellows in peach trees. Apply potash salts to the surface under the tree and soak it in; then sprinkle with old bay, leaves or straw. The German cruike muriate of potash is the best to use, applying from two pounds, according to size of tree. Apply one pound in the late fall and same quantity in the spring.

—A aloe cake with raisins, which has the advantage over many kinds of cake keeping well for two weeks, at least, is made from this recipe: One cup of sugar, half a cup of butter, three eggs, half a cup of sweet milk, one cup hopping full of chopped raisins, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and about two cups of flour; flavor with nutmeg. Bake in a moderate oven. The yolks of the eggs and the milk together, then stir the flour and raisins in.

—Sponge Cake.—Beat up three eggs for two minutes, add the peel of a lemon finely rasped. Roll six ounces of loaf sugar in half a gill of water, and pour it boiling on to the eggs. Whisk the mixture for twenty minutes or half an hour till it is very thick. The success of the cake depends on this being properly done. Have ready mixed two ounces of flour and three of rice flour and sift lightly into the batter. Bake in small tins, greased and sifted with a mixture of sugar and rice flour.

—A New Way to Cook Chickens.—Cut the chicken up, put it in a pan and cover it over with water; let it stew all night, when done make a thickening of cream and flour, adding a piece of butter, and pepper and salt. Have ready and bake a pair of short cakes, made as for pie crust, only not quite so rich, and cut in squares. This is much better than chicken pie and more simple to make. The cakes are split in two, a dish and the chicken gravy poured over while both are hot.

—A dish equal to the best steak and cheap enough for any man, is prepared from a shank of beef with some meat on it. Have the bone well broken; wash carefully to remove bits of bone; cover with cold water; watch when the boiling begins and take off the scum that rises. Skim over or stir; when the meat is tender season with salt and pepper, and add a little vinegar. Where this is done gelatine is quite superfluous. Set away and, if liked, other seasoning, and pour it hot upon the meat; stir together and put aside over night. It will rise in to handsome mottled slices for breakfast or supper.

Thumps in Pigs—Paralysis.

I have been experimenting for years trying to cure the diseases known as thumps in pigs. The symptoms are a heaving of the sides, the flanks, which increases to such an extent that pigs thus effected will get eat and rapidly become emaciated and assume die-from weakness. I have examined a number after death, but never found any of the internal organs which showed evi ence of disease. I am of opinion that it is caused by the accumulation of fat about the heart. Several pigs affected by this disorder have fallen dead about four months old, recovered by being given a teaspoonful of spirits of turpentine for several days in succession. The spirits of turpentine was diluted with milk and mixed well with oil bay, leaves or straw. The German cruike muriate of potash is the best to use, applying from two pounds, according to size of tree. Apply one pound in the late fall and same quantity in the spring.

Lore and Friendship.

One of the most perilous mistakes made by a woman is to misinterpret the polite attentions of the men she meets in the course of her career. Every man she is apt to regard every male friend as a possible lover. Such a conception of the absurdity, the chagrin, the mortification, the heartsickness and heavy disappointment she has known herself from the hope that advances are being made by her when in truth the supposed suitor has no serious intentions at all? What are advances, and when are men making them? A "course of small, quiet attentions," says Sterne, "which a man of sense and delicacy is vague as to be misunderstood, with now and then a look of kindness, and little or nothing said upon it." That is a man's answer to my question; this simplest and most straightforward of all. And after a long and careful research. And what a depth of cunning and deceitfulness is in it! The advantages are all on one side; so long as the man does not commit himself in set terms he can offer any attention he chooses. If the woman is on her guard all the better for her! If not, she must suffer the consequences of her credulity. But if the man be really in earnest he can bring a reservoir in which one hundred cubic feet of air can be compressed to one square inch; and thus charged it travelled from the Arsenal to Hertford and back, about fifty miles, in sixty-three minutes. The machinery and the whole work is extraordinary, and there is none of that noisy hiss and roar which accompanies the use of steam. Colonel Rathbone, the overcome some of the difficulties which beset former inventors by placing three cylinders of graduated size on each side of his engine, and by applying warmth to compressed air between each of the expansion of compressed air. At present it

The Dance and the Cake.

To the Editor of the Sentinel:

My letter on emigration is held back in the Secretary of the 4th, and seems to have waited upon interest after. In offering to the dawn at Norwood, on Oliver ave. no. 1 to 5 evidenced that the proceeds of that affair, after paying the hall rent and the officers, are to be applied by the ladies of the M. E. Society to the liquidation of their organ debt." The Norwood correspondent, apparently in good faith, quite in the subject, and accuses me of going out of my way "for the purpose of casting a slur on the Methodist church at Norwood, and the Baptist church at Charlevoix." She is greatly mistaken. It was not necessary to go out of my way at all to hear the news. The reports from those two places, whether true or false, have not only come to us in shades of the church in Banks. I am not a member of the church in Banks, never have been, and never expect to be. No member of that church in the least degree responsible for anything I have written. I have a right to say it. People in person actually in a position to know, and by her own admission in a position that qualifies her to pronounce that report in question 1881 and the dollars? Now Pardee, no evasion, but a straightforward yes or no.

The important letter of Rev. Geo. W. Bell in regard to the so called Lottery at Charlevoix, is worthy of a more elaborate consideration than I am able to give it at this time. I will, however, propose a question for him to answer: A number of men (?) lay their heads together to establish what is considered a lottery. They sell ten thousand tickets at six dollars each, realizing in the aggregate sixty thousand dollars. A part of this money, at the drawing, is returned to some of the ticket holders in the form of prizes, while the remainder goes into the pockets of the managers. Now pinion or several, at a dancing party, cuts a big cake into sixty pieces, issuing each piece for twenty five cents, receiving in the aggregate fifteen dollars. A part of this money is returned to a holder of one piece of cake in the form of a prize, while the remainder goes into the possession of the managers. What is the essential difference between the two cases?

Musings From Hayes.

BY GUS.

What is to be the capital of Louisiana after 1882?

—Old farms threw us a little off in regard to the ball we have business.

—There is some talk of our having a furniture manufactory in Hayes.

—Others, quit quarreling about your license and dances, and read I Thessalonians 5: 22.

—Does not the season our beautiful golden maples are so scarce, they have taken frightened away by the white buccaneer.

—School district No. 1 pays this year seventy cents on the dollar for school purposes; No. 2 pays eighty cents; No. 3 pays sixty-five cents; No. 4 pays $1.61; and No. 5 $1.45.

—How many people know that we have a compulsory school law in this state, and that guardians and parents who have children in their care between the ages of eight and fourteen years, must send them to school twelve weeks in the year, and six weeks of that time consecutively? There are not many in Hayes who violate the law in this respect.

Mr. Cannon vs. Thos. C. Platt has been nominated to succeed Francis Kernan as U. S. Senator from New York. Gen. Ben Harrison is the lucky man in Indiana.

BREVITIES.

—Local news is very scarce.

—Petoskey has a skating rink.

—Boyne has a dancing school.

—Miss now job material at the Sentinel office.

—Will A. Norton, of Boyne City, called on us Wednesday last.

—Senator Butters is spending a few days with his family at this place.

—A pleasant dancing party was held at Lewis' hall last Thursday evening.

—Reginald J. G. Hamblin is to be a candidate for the Circuit Judgeship.

—A Fire, Life and family arrived home from their southern trip last Saturday.

—We understand that Hon. E. H. Green will be a candidate for Circuit Judge.

—Hiram Carter is still lingering very low with paralysis, at the residence of Robert Miller, Esq.

—We are in receipt of a letter from one [illegible]

—Quite a number from this place attended the dancing party at Boyne Falls last Friday evening, and report a splendid time.

—A. I. Mallard, who has been confined to his bed for some days past, is able to attend to his duties again.

—Thomas Maxwell and wife, of Norwood, have gone to Battle Creek for a two weeks' visit among friends.

—Our readers will bear with us for the small amount of local news this week, occasioned by the absence of the editor.

—The Judicial Convention for the 19th Judicial Circuit will be held at Petoskey March 1st. Charlevoix county is entitled to three delegates.

—Capt. John Mason, who last season ranked on the capacity of mate of the steamer Maggie Mason, will next season have command of the steamer Gazelle.

—Col. O. F. Wisner will leave on before the Historic Society of this village on the evening of the 31st of January. Subject, "Elephant and the Conqueress."

—The Charlevoix O-H Fellows who visited Petoskey last Friday evening report an enjoyable time. After a friendly visit with their sister lodge they were invited to the hotel of D. Frank, where they found the tables beautifully spread with all the delicacies of the season. They all returned with the full conviction that their Petoskey brethren know just how to feed the lowers.

—The Petoskey Record came to our table last week from a new power press. With the exception of the Chicago Inter Ocean, 9th is the only power press in operation north of Traverse City. Ben Mosher has recently associated with him as a partner Mr. C. E. McCune, a young man of pushing character. We wish the Record success under its new management.

—On the inside of this paper will be found the particulars of the shocking tragedy enacted at Jasper, Mich. Both parties being favorably known to many of the Charlevoix people, it is not strange that many hearts here have been made sad in consequence. Mrs. Curtiss was well known among our people as the wife of Rev. E. Curtiss of Greenville, Mich., whose estrays, on the Charlevoix Summer Resort Chapter, stands on the upper terrace, south of C. Y. Cook's and next Prof. Hosley's. Mrs. Barnard, the woman accused of murdering Mrs. Curtiss, will be remembered as the good looking and prepossessing lady who took a very active part in the Charlevoix county Sunday School Convention last August. She read a paper on "The Relation of the Church to the Sunday School." She and Miss Amelia favored the convention with several very beautiful duets, entitled "The Last Hymn," and "Hope Beyond." It is a matter of astonishment how a woman as accomplished as she, could be guilty of the crime charged to her. She has been active, [illegible] husband of the accused, has appeared on the scene, and expresses great confidence in his wife's innocence, and will make a vigorous defense.

—Several cases of sore throat, croup, and a number of laugh etc., produced by the late cold snap, are reported in our town.

—S. W. Souther has purchased the 40 acre tract of land in Sec. 14 formerly belonging to B. F. Ingalls.

—Winter is growing fairly under the snow, so some of the farmers say, who have been prospecting.

—Rev. James Hood has been holding a series of meetings in Lakeview the past week.

—Mrs. W. S. Baker fell one day last week and sprained her ankle. She was not able to walk upon it for several days, but is now better.

—The assessors paid by the various school districts in our town for school purposes as published last week should read "on the hundred dollars of valuation" instead of "on the dollar."

—Miss Sophia Hess was the recipient of a very valuable present last week which came from a friend over the seas. It consisted of a ladies work box in morocco with satin lining and silver ornaments.

CHARLEVOIX.

A New Chicago Summer Resort—Its Attractions.

The following communication is from our regular Chicago correspondent, Jno. Quinn, and appeared in the Chicago Times of January 2nd. Mr. Quinn has for years been a regular visitor to Charlevoix, and is thoroughly posted on the many attractions of this delightful summer resort. We are glad to see the Chicago papers commencing to call attention to the beauties of Charlevoix, and hope that many of the Chicago people will visit us during the months of July and August, both a trip up in the "rolling lines" They visited Mackinaw, Petoskey and Charlevoix.

At the latter place they stayed several days, charmed by its surroundings, its quiet air, the pleasant resort there, the pure air, the whiteness of the lake and bluff of the city, all combined to make their stay very pleasant.

One of the gentlemen taking the place as well, secured a piece of land, intending it for a summer residence lot. The items in other gentlemen's doings some days after, and the energetic spirit and optimism regarding Charlevoix, agreed to purchase a large tract of land, and not a regret for a summer resort. This has been done, and a new company formed, a charter obtained and enrolled under our state laws as the "Chicago Summer Resort Company." Their capital stock has been placed at $10,000, in shares of $100 each, subject to call. The land has been paid for, and title secured. As soon as spring opens the place will be improved and made as beautiful as its situation deserves.

It is the intention of the company to open no place or expense to make this place very attractive to summer visitors. They have a fine location, high and dry, between two lakes, fronting both of them. This will give good fishing and fine boating grounds. Besides this the resort is but a few miles from three of the best trout streams in the state of Michigan. Charlevoix is naturally adapted for a quiet, healthy summer resort. The [illegible] of the company are [illegible] well known gentlemen.

The following are the officers:

President—[illegible]
Vice President—Silas M. Moore.
Secretary—Harvey Dean.
Treasurer—Benton Sutherland.
Board of Directors—Robert M. Cherry, James H. Moore, Caleb F. Gates, Silas M. Moore, Chilburn Spencer, J. K. Harmon, T. M. Avery, Rev. J. W. Hamilton.

From Pardee Ann.

The Sentinel is on Sir, we have a Sabbath school or rather we had one. It is a union one and meets in our house. They are, some and meets from the last. —Pete

Pete Pardee's turn now, and she wants to say by way of introduction that her digestion is in perfect order, and can digest of three square meals a day, and sleeps well nights, that she did not hear the bear idea in the wild with the same equipment from Banks was, whether he was of the masculine, feminine or neuter gender, started his tour in the middle of the week, some yards or yards, was to Pardee unknown, and still remains a profound mystery. She knew that the matter of the dance had been incorrectly reported, and was bound in justice to all concerned to correct it. Neither did she volunteer her services in defense of the ladies in question, but distinctly stated they needed no defense, and is happy to hear that Mr. and Mrs. Pro Tem agrees with her in that matter.

The ladies did wish to have the correction made, and if another was attended to place it where it belonged. Pro Tem thinks there was nothing in the article that would cast a slur on the M. E. church. I fail to see that any cause for correction could be placed on it, and other newspapers published in this region, among the article in the Sentinel, in fact a dance was held at Norwood on Christmas eve under the auspices of that church. In regard to information furnished by the former pastor of the church, I am authorized by him to say that he never furnished such information to any correspondent in Banks.

The organ was used in his service as long as he remained here, he having two church good sense to see any objection. The aged correspondent, who, according to Pro Tem, has spent more years in the Methodist church than Pardee has days of discretion, asks us this commandment, and wants a plain yes or no, without evasion.

Did not the M. E. church in Norwood, through the agency of some of its members, sell and use the organ to aid in paying off a debt on the church building, thereby sharing the proceeds with the owner of the hall and the fiddler? And Pardee, without evasion, answers with a plain no! Why bless your dear old soul, Mr. Three Score, that is just what we have been saying all the time, there was a widely published report to the effect that the church in Banks had sold the organ to pay off a debt on the church building, and that the proceeds were divided with the owner of the hall and the fiddler. Now Pardee, no evasion, but a straightforward yes or no.

The important letter of Rev. Geo. W. Bell in regard to the so called Lottery at Charlevoix, is worthy of a more elaborate consideration than I am able to give it at this time. I will, however, propose a question for him to answer: A number of men (?) lay their heads together to establish what is considered a lottery. They sell ten thousand tickets at six dollars each, realizing in the aggregate sixty thousand dollars. A part of this money, at the drawing, is returned to some of the ticket holders in the form of prizes, while the remainder goes into the pockets of the managers. One person or several, at a dancing party, cuts a big cake into sixty pieces, issuing each piece for twenty five cents, receiving in the aggregate fifteen dollars. A part of this money is returned to a holder of one piece of cake in the form of a prize, while the remainder goes into the possession of the managers. What is the essential difference between the two cases?

Banks, Jan. 13, 1881.

Musings From Hayes.

BY GUS.

What is to be the capital of Louisiana after 1882?

—Old farms threw us a little off in regard to the ball we have business.

—There is some talk of our

POLITICAL BREVITIES.

☞ The Morey forgery stands out, fresh and clear, like a full moon.

☞ Mr. Tilden will enter upon a "feeble spread now, which will possibly continue till 1881.

☞ "Lone lanes at the cross roads and many hens at the county seats" is the latest good advice to the South, furnished by a Southern paper.

☞ If Indians were eligible her cities what good Democratic Congressmen those two Sioux chiefs, Bobtailed and Don't-know-Hay, would make.

☞ If it does not make much difference whether the Democrats begin the new year with a set of good resolutions or not. The outcome will be the same either way, doubtless.

☞ Is there a new named Allen G. Thurman in the United States Senate? A Senator of that name is credited in the State of Ohio, but if he is present he conceals the fact well. Perhaps he spends his days in silent review of his fine collection of political blunders: there are enough of those to keep him busy and quiet.—N. Y. Tribune.

☞ The pseudonym that the Morey letter was a forgery, and that it was "imposed on the public" as genuine chiefly by the representatives and Senators of the Democratic Convention in search of "anything to help the head" also. It is really doing a great wrong to permit such blunderers as Brunson and the publishers of Frank to go about in unkempt New York unprotected. Neither cannot learn of sense to recognize a bold, bad man when he sees him.

☞ The Democrats threaten that if Congress does not adopt a particular programme they will exercise the controlling of the Electoral vote, the Democratic Representatives will run one of the elections while the Senate is going on, and then they say: "How are you going to get it finished at all?" They are always a year to break the clock if you do not let them wind it up, and set it in the right direction of the hands at last count. They will just set fire to the house if you give them the key to the power containing the jam. They will do all sorts of disagreeable and dangerous things unless they are immediately done. They are like the boy who said, to his new guest: "I am one of those little boys that have to be ruled by kindness, and if you don't give me candy I'll kick you on the shin." Or, they are like the young woman who was swallowed: to have her way, in the only safeguard against her carrying out her threat that if she was swallowed she would disgrace the family.—National Republican.

The Morgan Joint Rule.

It is rumored in Washington that the Democrats are making a "sand hunt" to secure the presence of a sufficient number of their own members in the House of Representatives to constitute a quorum in case a political fight over the Morgan joint rule for counting the Electoral vote is precipitated. If it should be found necessary to do but to count the votes that have been properly certified under the law. All that remains to be done is a simple matter of computation. The counting may proceed as it did during Jefferson's time, or a century. There will be no party nor individual dispute the result. Then why do the Democrats insist that a rule shall be adopted under these circumstances which shall enable either House to reject any votes that have been cast?

Congress has its hands full of business of an urgent nature. It is stated that the passage of all the necessary Appropriation bills will require four of the seven weeks which remain in the present session. The Refunding measure is scarcely second in importance to the Appropriation bills, and there is but one or two differences of opinion in both Houses as to the terms and conditions under which refunding should be undertaken that the discussion of the measure will probably consume considerable time. The Census Bureau is ready, and the necessary information will be furnished to Congress for proceeding with the new apportionment, which ought to be made as the present session in order to enable the various Legislatures to redistrict in time for the elections to the first Congress under the new census. The frauds of National railway supervision, who include the great mass of the American people without regard to party, are anxious that some agreement upon this subject shall be reached at once. There are numerous other measures which appeal to Congress with urgency, and it is clear that it will not be possible to accomplish at the present session all that ought to be done. Then why do the Democrats propose to consume time and resort to their partisan majority, which has already been repudiated by the people, to pass a joint rule which is in no sense necessary if they intend to count the vote honestly?

This state of things leads up to an irresistible inference that Democrats contemplate mischief making, and any desperate effort to force through the proposed rule will be so regarded by the people. They have no right to put this important question before them. If they do not actually intend to make a dishonest use of the opportunity the proposed rule will give them. The vexatious question of electing the President and counting the Electoral vote ought to be settled deliberately and finally by a Constitutional amendment, upon which not merely all the branches of the Government, but the people themselves through their local Governments, should pass judgment. The proposition to settle it temporarily by a mere rule of Congress, and in such manner as will give a partisan majority in either House an opportunity to defeat the will of the people, and at a time when no settlement of the question is necessary, is vicious on its face, and the Democrats can only argue it at their peril.—Murray Tribune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Bridgeport, Conn., has a bridge tender who has not been absent from duty a day in twenty-six years.

—A misdemeanin of sometime ince, enderly the week of a young Lieutenant in the navy, is to be called in a fair for the benefit of the Children's Asylum in Washington.

—In Hungary it is a practice of long standing to store grain in vaulted cellars or cisterns. Occasionally, in plowing a peasant comes across one of those cisterns filled with grain. Sometimes the old people die, forgotten, no doubt, after some war, when the whole community was cut off.

—The Argentine Government is endeavoring to found an English-speaking colony on the banks of the Rio Negro, and President Roca is prepared to grant land free for 20,000 Irish immigrants. The Buenos Ayres Standard says that the fact seems to be ignored in England that the La Plata is infinitely richer than Australia, or New Zealand, whereas the lands in Buenos Ayres are to be had far cheaper.

—Old Hannah Everitt, of Port Valley, Ga., died recently, aged 103. Miss Grace Daggett, of New Haven, died at St. A. H. Meldowen, of Greenville, S. C., by being thrown from his buggy, at 85. And also, a Mrs. Hall, a full cousin of Joshua Sherra, of Wyaushing, Pa., just after he had celebrated his centennial birthday with great spirit, and Benjamin Brownsteel, at Uniontown, Pa., aged 102.

—Readers of Whittier's beautiful poem, "Among the Hills," will remember that thing, which was a favorite with the old gold. Well, he is dead, for he was an actual man, not an ideal of the poet only. He was born in what was lived at Sandwich, N. H. "Neither his house nor his estate have passed to strangers, yet the most wretched tramp who ever took the road never abused the free hospitality of that Quaker home." He was a Japanese laborer lives in a house of not more than four rooms; one for eating, sleeping, and one for sitting; one for cooking; one for bathing and one to store wood. He never wears boots, nor brings mud into the house. He and his family sit on the floor when they eat, and take their meals at a low table. The floor of their dining and sitting room is covered with clean soft mats, upon which at night cotton comforters are spread to sleep under. Such a house can be built and furnished for $100 and though cheap and small, is comfortable. The beds found in almost all laborers' houses, is in daily use.

—A Christian woman in Boston who was formerly in good circumstances, is reported to be making shirts and clothing for a large firm, the numbers of which are cheap beyond measure. Her sewing on a lady's cloak requires the sum—but not unimportant—pre-vious for making and putting in the sleeves. Jeans pants are only equal to the task. These shoes themselves should, of course, be well, warm and strong, as the sole will not discommode or pinch the feet. This business is reported as prospered at the shoe shops, but one can make them that answer every purpose with very little trouble and expense. First cut a pattern the size and shape you want, and then procure from which it must be cut to think. Basic those on left of glasses of the family, and those on right of glasses of the family. Then in the erection of 300 mills, with a production of 2,000,000 barrels of flour, goods, which in strength and durability were, and in beauty are fully equal to those produced in the French manufactory at Lyons.

—In the manufacture of iron and steel the story is the same. We have furnaces which are supplied with every modern appliance, and are making 2,000,000 tons of pig iron per month.

—The growth of our farming and stock products is even more marvelous. Twelve years ago this wonderful illustration of the results of chemical science was looked upon as merely an interesting and curious process, of little value and of most uncertain promise. To-day a single establishment is making 150,000 tons of fertilizers annually.

—The United States is looked upon as the home of all inventions and effective labor-saving devices. Fifty thousand steam engines and more than an equal number of water-wheels form the machinery of the country.

—Take a Dip in the Bosums of Cold Jordan, and you'll be sure to enjoy this, eat lunch or lunch, add a little salt, cayenne, grated lemon peel, nutmeg, parsley, a few beef crumbs and two eggs, to one pound meat. Put all into a saucepan, with two tablespoonfuls of butter, and two ounces flour. This is the proportions to one pound chopped meat. Stir over the fire for five minutes. Let the mixture get cold, and then put it into light paste to bake, in the shape of rolls.

—Tea Rolls.—Half a cake of compressed yeast in three half pints of lukewarm water; add a quart of sifted flour and mix well to a thick batter. Let it stand for a couple of hours in a moderately warm place till well risen, then add two eggs, an ounce of butter, four ounces of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt; add flour (about a pint) and work well with the hands till it is a soft dough; make into rolls; put them in the pans they are to be baked in, and set near the fire to rise; as soon as they rise, bake in a quick oven.

—When an orchard requires fertilizing it is best to mix this all over the ground, and not to apply manure only near the trees. This is a mistake. The growth of roots, close to the trees, for roots grow where the soil is richest, and prevents the proper growth of branches on the tree. Manure tends to encourage the growth of wood rather than fruit. Spread the manure broadcast, and it will be evenly distributed, and will not encourage the growth of wood rather than fruit. Apply the manure in the fall, when it will be close and pliow in the clover, giving a liberal supply of lime or wood ashes. The clover is then plowed under. Orchards need lime and ashes more than manure, and will thrive on these healthy, smooth bark.

—Tanning Sheep Skins.—To tan sheep skins so the wool will not shed, make strong soap, using hot water; when cold, wash the skin in it, and lay it between them between the hands to get the dirt out of the wool; then wash them out in clean cold water. Now dissolve alum and salt each half a pound, with a little soft soap, and spread it over the skins, and let them soak in it over night, or twelve hours; then hang over a pail to drain. When well drained, spread or stretch carefully over a board to dry. When it is dry, shave off the loose scales of saltpetre and alum (universities), and sprinkle the flesh side of each skin, rubbing it well; then lay the flesh sides together, and keep them in the shade for two or three days, turning them upon the uppermost every day until perfectly dry. Then scrape the flesh side with a blunt knife, to remove any remaining scraps of flesh; trim off projecting points, and rub the flesh side with pumice stone to smooth, and with the hands.—Country Gentleman.

Put a sheet of white paper, well moistened, into a shallow tin pan. Drop the batter on as Cablespoonfuls, make into cakes, and bake in a very quick oven till brown.

Death of Hiram Carter.

A telegram was received in this town on Wednesday announcing the death of Hiram Carter, aged 81 years, at the residence of Jackson Miller, Esq. Mr. Carter was one of the oldest, if not the oldest settler in the county, having been a resident of this town for many years, and a Royal Templar from its organization. He was also a member of the Order of the Golden Eagle, and the funeral services were conducted by Hon. H. H. Wilkinson, Chaplain of Charlevoix Lodge, F. & A. M. Mr. Carter leaves a wife and [illegible] children, who have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

Death of Mrs. Wm. Pond.

Death of Mrs. Bowers.

Mrs. Bowers, wife of Mr. Wm. Bowers, died at her residence in Charlevoix on Sunday morning, January 23rd, after a long illness with consumption. She was a native of Canada, and was 58 years old at the time of her death. She was a member of the Baptist church.

Last Sunday a dog was killed here by strychnine. The dog was owned by Mr. Jones, of Hayes. The strychnine was administered by some person or persons unknown. The dog was valuable, and was considered so property. The dog walked around in a circle for about two hours, and then fell dead. The dog was killed because it was supposed to be mad. There is no evidence that the dog was mad.

Mr. Hamilton, of this village, died at his residence on Sunday morning, January 23rd, of consumption. He was a native of Canada, and was 58 years old at the time of his death. He was a member of the Baptist church

Training Day—A Reminiscence of Bygone Days.

The crowning glory of our village in bygone times was its volunteer military company, the Suffolk Guards. To miss seeing a training of the Guards was an irreparable misfortune in a boy's life. They were uniformed in stiff, shiny hats, a little like fire buckets, blue coats with swallow tails and bright brass buttons. In summer-time we, in linen pantaloons as white and stiff as soap and starch could make them. Jim Leggett in his everyday clothes, clerk in a dry goods and grocery store, measuring out pennyworths of sand and tape, did not rank very high with us boys, but Jim Leggett, arrayed in the Suffolk Guard uniform became another man. There he shone. The Guard was an artillery company, and used to drag after them on parade a nine-pound gun. In our estimation that gun could have converted the largest fleet in the world into matchwood. It was hauled in the "caisson," which, at some times, we rode in that dark, dingy apartment where it was kept, we respected in such feelings akin to those entertained by the South Sea Islander for his biggest and most terrible god. That gun and carriage were no inanimate pieces of machinery with us. They were a monster of the ink bottle sent Hunker Hill, New Orleans and our own state troops, plus whatever there was in war and seemingly nothing to make any history.

We ran away from school regularly on training-day. It mattered not how hard the schoolmaster might punish us, nothing could resist those bright swords, gilt cuirasses, blue coats, brass buttons and music. The prospect of seeing the Guards drummed and only brilliant fragments of the army in town and three companies on the river, we must have known the reive we must pay for our absence. We could be clad in the heavy task armed our Dom's cowhide most merciless attention. Two half days we underwent the punishment, and when I was called to mind, no matter what was been attempted and accomplished, there is always too much appearance of a forced effort. Each punishment but has been freshly painted seems to say in the plainest language, "I at least am an ornament to this place." Each rusty peg and shelf that has been planted in the front yard, seems by its very prominence to challenge the admiration of all beholders, in regard to its own personal appearance and the style in general of the house to that front yard and the house and even to some extent the whole hill. So many an attempt made by the farmer to ornament his house, even when aided, by wealth, the desire to accomplish, is not always distorted, eccentric and ludicrous.

Yet the man may have perfect success in making farm houses and their surroundings very unnecessarily desolate and uncomfortable. Farmers have convenient barns and comfortable dwellings, but it is the necessary thing that several buildings should crowd each other; and even worse than this—in many farm houses the principal view from the sitting-room is perhaps the front and low fence. To see only the village fair, from the Otter Pond to the end of Long Wood, it would run like thunder up into the dimmest gutted recesses and down to the nether corners. Whatever I might be it called upon me to follow it. My whole life for the time being would be between the drumsticks and the sheep-skin. The flourishing of those two sticks by the drummer seemed to me the embodiment of warlike pomp and circumstance. It is fortunate that and when I heard the concussions I lived in a fascinating haze from dream of glory, battles, and victory.

We used to speculate largely whether the band would march in front when the Guards went into battle. Of course, it was presumed that the music would play, while the Guards, in their shiny white, starched pantaloons, advanced into the jaws of death. There was considerable anxiety manifested for the bass-drum and trombone players. It was argued by some that the drummer might, if an enemy attacked him, leave off his music long enough to hit him a rap or two with the drumsticks, but the case of the trombonist seemed utterly hopeless.

When the Guards had finished their artillery practice they marched through the village and culminated their manœuvres by going around the liberty-pole at the foot of the main street, in a semi-circular single die. I have never seen that movement imitated by any other troops. I think it was a species of tactics originating with the Captain. There was never such another Captain. He was very large—but mainly in breadth. He quite eclipsed the conveyance. In brilliancy, however, he was outshone in the same relation that the comet's nucleus does the sun. In fact, a man could not long remain a mere Captain. He was promoted to a Major-ship. This proved a great disappointment to the boys, because he never "trained" after that save on grand musters on Fourth of July. They chose another Captain, but he did not fail till the next commander's place. And no fife and drum. The bass drum has for me never been equaled, neither has the original Captain.—Prince Rice Millcroft, in the San Francisco Chronicle.

The Surroundings of the Farm House.

Why is it that when farmers attempt to ornament their homes they so often make failures? Why is it that so many farmers make such a perfect success at not ornamenting their homes? Why is it that so many farmers, without making strenuous personal efforts, can make the rooster their business disagreeable and unattractive, succeed in attaining the same object by having a thoroughfare or highway, all the way down from Vienna to Belgrade. Each mill is inscribed with its owner's name, and found a place in passing, to copy one or two, such as "Johan Ireney con Landos" and "Jonasvitch Makoppopul," as being the most unique examples of Magyar peasant nomenclature. As the steamer goes shooting by these mills, so close that the shaw—dash, chaf?—of the wheel is distinctly audible, it is amusing to note the inmates looking for all the world like Humpty Dumpty in the play, rushing to the bounce windows to wave a welcome and have a look at the passengers.—*Cor. A Test of Innocence.

A poor, pale seamstress was arraigned for theft in Paris. She appeared at the bar with her baby of nine months on her arm. She went to get some work one day and stole three gold coins of ten francs each. The money was missed soon after she left her employer, and a servant was sent to her room to claim it. The servant found her about to quit the room with the three gold coins in her hand. She said to the servant, "I am going to carry them back to you." Nevertheless she was arrested by the Commissioner of Police, and he ordered her to be sent to the Police Court for trial. She was too poor to engage a lawyer, and when called by the Judge she had to say for herself. She replied: "The day I went to my employer's I carried my child with me. It was in my arms, as it is now. I was paying no attention to it. There were several gold coins on the mantle-piece, and, unknown to me, it stretched out its little hand and seized three pieces, which I did not observe until I got home. I at once put on my bonnet and was going back to my employer to return them when I was arrested. That is the solemn truth, as I hope for Heaven's mercy."

The magistrate could not believe this story. They upbraided the mother for her impudence in endeavoring to palm off such a manifest lie for the truth. They brought her, for her own sake to retract so absurd a tale, but she could have no effect but to oblige the court to sentence her to a month's imprisonment than they were disposed to inflict upon one so young and evidently so deep in poverty.

These appeals had no effect, except to strengthen the poor mother's pertinacious adherence to the truth. Finally, as this firmness was sustained by that look of innocence which the most practiced criminal can never counterfeit, the court was at some loss to discover what decision justice demanded. To further their embarrassment one of the judges proposed to renew the search described by the mother. Three gold coins were placed on the clerk's table. The mother was requested to select the same piece which she stood at her employer's house. She was then in a dismal dungeon in court. The baby soon discovered the bright coins, eyed them for a moment, smiled, and then stretched forth its tiny hand and clutched them in its fingers with a miser's eagerness. The mother was at once acquitted.

Denver.

The city of Denver ends the plain travel. After the long journey through a region where the waves of civilization seem to die away among the bluffs and plains and canyons, it is a strange sensation to find one's self once again in a full-grown and prosperous town, with Paris fashions in homes and people, and the look of thrift that usually comes only with time. It needs the iron wall on the west to persuade one that he is on the very front of civilization, and that what is seen about him has been scarce a score of years in its making.—Foreign Letter.

ATTRACTIONS AT EVANSTON.

College Home, Lectures, &c.

A few moments at my disposal affords me an opportunity to comply with your request to write something for the SENTINEL.

The above heading I consider will embrace the principal matters of interest that I have observed since my arrival in Evanston. Of course the college and its surroundings claim the first attention. The buildings, which are all of stone, are very substantial and commodious, and are situated in a most beautiful grove. The campus is level as a floor, and is covered with a carpet of green. The whole presents a most delightful appearance, and is a favorite resort for students and citizens.

The lecture course is now fairly opened and the senior class has provided a course of the very best talent.

Wednesday Thos. fell off on the 12th ult. subject, "The World's Tomorrow." Wm. Penn vs. M. P., of England spoke on the 19th inst., of the "Heroes of the Hosmin Arch." These two speeches on the 26th, Judge A. M. Torrence, the author of "A Fools Errand" &c., also will talk on the "Ku Kluxism Era." Prof. James E. Murdoch, the elocutionist, and the Hon. Carl Schurz.

A few evenings ago I had the pleasure of listening to Josiah Hanson the "Uncle Tom" of Mrs. Stowe's famous novel. At the age of 84 years, 70 years of which were spent in slavery, he stands erect and firm, and speaks with clearness and force. He opened by relating the particulars of Lovejoy's death in Alton, Illinois, in 1837, and concluded with the declaration that the "Stars and Stripes" would yet float over every inch of American soil, and every slave be free. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Fee, of Berea, Ky., who spoke of the condition of the slaves in Kentucky, Hon. Thurlow Weed, and Gen. Neal Dow. Every lecturer may be relied upon to say something worth hearing, and the lectures are well attended.

Evanston is beautifully situated on the shore of Lake Michigan, ten miles north of Chicago. The population number about seven thousand. The Chicago and Northwestern railroad affords means of travel and transportation. Any person or persons can procure an opportunity of seeing the country around Evanston by calling at the livery stable and hiring a horse and buggy. I did so and found the country around the city very pleasant. The farms are well cultivated, and the farmers appear to be doing well. With the exception of the snow, which is very deep, the weather has been very pleasant. Sleighing has been excellent. Yours,

AN Indiana woman, who had to grant enrollment to enable her boy to draw $1,000 bounty, has had to pay $1,000 to get him released from the army. Illinois is not going to get mixed in any such business. Five dollars for Senator, and freedom for Freeman, any bellicose man in search of glory can go and meet it where it will be of some use.

A CALIFORNIA paper says Lucky Baldwin has a mortgage on a ranch, which is worth $1,000,000, and he has refused $500,000 cash for it. Baldwin is a man of nerve. He would not have refused $1,000,000 cash for the ranch if he had not been sure that he could get more than that amount for it. He is a man who knows what he is about.

THERE was 19,567 net deaths reported in London last week, which is 1,000 more than the average of the corresponding week of the last ten years. The mortality was largely in excess of that due to the cold weather, and the great fatality among the poor is attributed to the fact that the severe weather has prevented many of the poor from earning wages. The mortality from small-pox, which is also large, is attributed to the fact that many persons have neglected to be vaccinated.

Home Life in Japan.

Following is from a review in the New York Sun of Miss Isabella L. Bird's book, "Unbeaten Tracks in Japan:"

In this house, which seems to have been rather better than an average dwelling of the middle class, Miss Bird paid fifty cents a day for two rooms with rice and tea. The meals came up on a low, or small table, six inches high, of old gold lacquer, with the rice in a gold lacquer bowl, while the teapot and cup were of fine Satsuma porcelain. There is, of course, a vast difference between the house here described and the mud cabins occupied by large numbers of the rural agriculturists, yet even in the outwardly cleaner dwellings of well-to-do persons there is a great neglect of sanitary precautions. There is, to be sure, a bath-tub, and most of the persons have recourse to it once a week, but the water is used without change by all the inmates of a house, and soap is not employed. Partial and intermittent washings are confined to putting the feet into hot water when they are covered with mud, and washing the hands and face, or giving them a slap with a damp towel. The main, because a clean surface, swarm with insect life, and the persons of the people are infested with vermin. The water for drinking water is taken from wells situated amid crowded houses, where contaminations from sewage pervade the entire neighborhood. It is frequently in the farming villages that the sewage is kept in large tubs sunk into the earth at the house door, whence it is removed in buckets to the fields.

As regards the mass of the Japanese population, the essential elements of their diet are rice, fish and daikon—a pickled root notorious for its frightful odor, which, that of sauerkraut is delicious perfume. The range of eatables, however, open to the richer Japanese is almost unlimited, though, except on festival occasions, very little money is spent upon food. The rather large number of birds and river fish are caught in nets, and thirteen or fourteen kinds of shell fish. Crows and storks are tutors of the rice; but game birds are occasionally eaten by the middle classes. Fowls are also killed for the table when Buddhism prevails, or when Buddhist teachings of the sacred life have been outlawed. How large is the variety of vegetables may be seen from the fact that no less than fourteen varieties of beans are grown for food, but, with the exception of the celebrated daikon, all of them are singularly tasteless. Seaweed is a common article of food, and is dried and carried everywhere in the interior. Pickled vegetables are enormously consumed, cucumbers and eggplant being most frequently used for pickling. With the exception of the "negi," which is stewed with sugar and soy and whose large seeds are like peach kernels, fruits are eaten raw and without condiment. The Japanese have no puddings, nor, cream, nor custards, or anything in which milk or butter is essential. They are great eaters, however, of sweetmeats, but the best of these are singularly insipid and either the sugar or the rice flour used in them it has a stale or musty taste.

In Japanese kitchens cooking is done at small fireplaces over charcoal fires, and the utensils are, for the most part, limited to kettles and brass tongs. Although the cuisine of quail, woodcock and snipe is unknown, and there are on sale, are first cut into small pieces, and then boiled in water, with a little soy, or are broiled or baked but on the most commonly eaten raw, served in small cubes, if they could only make people believe they perspired a little in Japan surroundings I think they would really be willing to do. And every day I seriously expect to meet them in their dancers and Panama hats. Their rooms are the most extraordinary apartments I every struck. Hides, bits of canvas, bones, fur clothes, everything that looks old and smells unsavory, is scattered about the floor in a profusion which is felt if not attractive. A white man who had never been to the south pole or there, but could not be entitled into the open air. But I must say that Miss Bird has asserted his supremacy in a decided way they consent to come forth. Neither of these creatures ever seems to matter how cold the weather. They saunter along with bodies and limbs bared, and if the air were balmy and laden with the odors of the tropics. They laugh at our liens as they would at the antics of young simians. Even the pipe tyre, though, The lyre-type. These three types are representative of three children's rites of development through which prehistoric music had passed and in the order just named. In the first period in the development of music was the drum stage, in which drums and drums alone were used by man. The second was the pipe stage, in which pipes, as well as drums, were employed. The third was the lyre stage, in which stringed instruments were added to the stock. These three stages answered respectively to rhythm, melody and harmony. In the musical history of mankind the lyre stage is never found to precede the pipe stage, nor the pipe stage to precede the drum stage.

—A writer who has devoted some attention to the decorators and artisans of Japan says that the worker in metal is without question the most artistic but that all Japanese workmen and artists display the happy-go-lucky method in their work. They undergo a thorough training in ancient custom and precedent. A lad-book with elaborate instructions and practical lessons in the principles of art would be one end of the mill-pond, half a mile away from the window, and regard out upon the bleak waste of snow and fields, he sees a couple of small black figures gliding over the surface. Presently there is a spurt of snow, and a trace of a smile shows among his wrinkles as he recognizes the skaters.

Perhaps he had reached the time, even so many years ago, when he, too, was a lad and had skated on his own town," as his father often declared. Looking to one of the boys he said, "Ben, it seems to me that the pond's a much nicer place for you than the schoolroom to-day. Let's go fishing. I can skate, but perhaps I can show you how to cut a figure eight or a backward roll."

Ben, with his two companions hurried at Mr. Chalker with eyes widely opened, but they soon found that in was in earnest, for the boy's father had begun putting on his skates.

"Now," said Mr. Chalker, "two of you get out the fish-sled, and keep on plenty of sticks from the wood-pile. Be sure and put in the gaff and some pork. Herton, go down to Mr. Sampson, the butcher, and tell him we'll be late, and have some lines, and a few minnows for bait."

When the school-house had been properly locked up, and they had started, dragging the sled after them, it occurred to Ben to suggest a slide. So all three got upon the wood, and slid down the hill backward on the pond. The road was steep but straight, though a little to the northward was a sharp curve where the wind had blown away the snow, leaving a crust of smooth ice. Over this they went at a lively rate of steering. Poor Ben couldn't turn the corner, and in another second the sled schoolmaster and all plunged into the depths of a big drift. Nothing was to be seen of Mr. Chalker for a moment but his heels; but he shortly emerged, puffing and blowing with

THE CURTISS TRAGEDY

What Rev. Mr. Curtiss, the Murdered Woman's Husband, Says of the Matter.

A well-to-do young man went to the church sociable, where I was also, having my self, as he accompanied. While the church was being lighted, he said, "I'll tell you what the matter is." Thinking that he was a little hot from violence of exercise and action, and thanked the kind man for his offer. He accompanied me home at 9 o'clock. When I entered my home I found Mrs. Curtiss lying on the lounge. Mr. Curtiss, Mr. Dougherty, Mr. Mellen and M. and Mrs. Bush among others were in the room when I entered. When asked how I happened Mr. Curtiss stated that she was taking her tea in the afternoon, and on asking Mrs. Barnard opened the door as I walked, without stopping to rap, as I was ordered now to do in the house, saying that she did not wish to see her. Mr. Barnard stated that she was going to have a dark spell, as she had some of the symptoms. Mrs. Curtiss assumed an entirely different appearance from what she did when she came to. Thinking that she was unconscious of what she was saying, I asked her if she could attend her class meeting on Sunday. She replied that she would try. She then said that she was going to have a dark spell, and then took a seat quietly and quiet on her lounge. Mrs. Curtiss seemed as much at home as could be, and said that she was very much pleased and asked to see those in an exhausted condition. While she was entertaining the fifty Mrs. Barnard went something over her head, and then she had entire control for a few moments. When she recovered she found her clothes in flames, and Mrs. Barnard out of sight or hearing. She managed to get to her feet and began to fight the fire. She started and was met on the bedroom to get some clothes to smother herself, and was further on doing all over her walking on the floor, down stairs, and tried to extinguish the fire by rolling on the floor. She could be carried, but managed to make a noise of some kind that attracted the attention of Dr. Arnold, and he came in. When he entered she was carried into the hall, and said, "Brother, I am dying." He called for Mr. Dougherty, who came in the front door, and the lady came in the rear, and I heard a human voice say, "Dr. Curtiss is dead." I then arose to my feet. Curtiss, in order to escape her. Her clothes from her breast to her feet were all burned off, her corset and underskirt and stockings were burned, and her husband was also on her body. Her face was badly burned, and her hair was burned off in spots, and her hands were burned badly in places, and she was in a great deal of pain. She was carried to the lounge in the room where I found her. She was conscious of what she was saying. She said she was going to have a dark spell, as she had some of the symptoms. Mrs. Curtiss assumed an entirely different appearance from what she did when she came to. Congress.

The Senate on the 8th passed a bill for the reclamation of the Potomac marshes. Mr. Ingalls called attention to the action of the House on the bill to refund Chinese fines. Mr. Vest objected to the consideration of the bill, and it went over. The Senate resumed the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, and after a short discussion the bill was passed. The session was devoted to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The House, by a vote of 167 to 88, passed the resolution reported by Mr. Young, authorizing the appointment of a Commission to examine and report on the subject of food. In Mr. Stiefle's absence, Mr. Springer moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to prohibit the importation of adulterated and imitation dairy products. The motion was defeated—yeas 120, nays 121—not two-thirds in the affirmative. Mr. Springer demanded the yeas and nays, and the House refused to order them by a vote of 120 to 121. The House was then adjourned without a quorum.

In the Senate on the 9th the Select Committee on Transfer of Domestic Animals reported, with some amendments, the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and for the suppression and prevention of contagious diseases, etc. Mr. Kirkwood, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to extend Postal Telegraph business in the cities and villages of organized territories. Mr. Butler introduced a bill to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and to confer jurisdiction over it upon the Eastern district of Arkansas. Mr. Wallace introduced a bill providing for the granting of certificates of naturalization to Chinese subjects. Mr. Sherman called up the bill to provide for the coinage of the silver bullion purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury under the act of July 14, 1890. The bill was passed. The House resolution to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance was agreed to. The Senate then went into executive session, and soon after adjourned. In the House on the 9th the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry was considered, printed and committed to a special committee. Mr. Springer moved a motion to postpone the pending order, the effect of which was to set aside the Sunday order, and the motion was rejected: 72 to 98. Mr. Springer then moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill to prohibit the importation of adulterated and imitation dairy products. The motion was defeated—yeas 120, nays 121—not two-thirds in the affirmative. Mr. Springer demanded the yeas and nays, and the House refused to order them by a vote of 120 to 121. The House was then adjourned without a quorum.

In the Senate on the 10th the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry was considered, printed and committed to a special committee. Mr. Hoar introduced a motion to postpone the pending order, the effect of which was to set aside the Sunday order, and the motion was rejected: 32 to 38. Mr. Sherman called up the bill to provide for the coinage of silver bullion. A substitute was passed to pay the silver bullion in coin. The House resolution to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance was agreed to. The Senate then went into executive session, and soon after adjourned. In the House on the 10th the bill to prohibit the importation of adulterated and imitation dairy products was passed. A joint resolution was passed authorizing the payment of 3,000 pounds of Peruvian bark now in the Commissary of Agriculture's possession to the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, to be distributed in such places as he may direct. Mr. Mason called up the bill to amend the act to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases of animals from one State into another, and the bill was passed. The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Outhwaite in the chair, and resumed consideration of the bill to provide for the coinage of silver bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890. Pending action thereon the House took a recess.

CHARLEVOIX, FEB. 8, 1881.

WILLIAM A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

The County Judgeship.

Knowing that you are always willing that all sides of every question of interest to the public should be heard, I assume a few words on the judgeship, I wish to call the attention of the many readers of your excellent paper to the one of the candidates that I think the citizens of Charlevoix county at least should support for this position.

I refer to the Hon. E. H. Green. Whilst I would urge his claims, I would not say one word against either of the other two candidates. Both are gentlemen and able lawyers, and have both filled the office of Circuit Judge very creditably. As a lawyer and gentleman, E. H. Green is their equal, and we see no reason why he could not do the office as much honor as either of them have done.

Mr. Green graduated at the Michigan University and was admitted in March, 1865. Soon he first visit to Charlevoix in May of the same year, and in June of the same year he opened a law office here, and commenced the practice of his profession. Immediately he entered into the spirit of the Democratic organization of this county, and was elected to the office of Prosecuting Attorney in the fall of 1866, and re-elected to the same office. When in 1869 Charlevoix county was organized it was its first Prosecuting Attorney, and was elected unanimously.

In 1872 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1874 was returned by a second term. He was again elected Prosecuting Attorney in 1876 and 1878, and is now County Treasurer, Every position he has filled faithfully and well, and time to the many places of trust he has filled for the public, he has a long, and in this regard, unstained record for the Hon. E. C. Leach, was its editor.

When treason threatened to destroy the nation in 1861, he went into the army and served from all the close of the war, and returned to the peaceful pursuits of American citizenship.

The 13th Judicial Circuit was organized in 1846. Bousfield was Judge for nine years, then, when his term is up, will have held it six years, and now he would have it extended to twelve.

Traverse City lawyers have so far had the honors, while the lawyers of the other counties of the circuit are equally competent to fill the position. Now, let Charlevoix orderly bring forward their candidate, and for this time claim the honor, not because we think our candidate is superior in all others, but because we are citizens of the great state of Michigan, and claim the rights and privileges of such, and because our candidate is the equal of any in the circuit. One who has chosen our state, received in the seventeen of his country in the times that tried men's souls, and one who has honored every civil position he has filled, and one who will honor the bench of the 13th district.

Yours,
ROBT. MAIER.

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted at a recent meeting of the Charlevoix Good Templars, as a mark of respect to the memory of the late Lewis H. Hamlin:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty Ruler of the Universe, in His infinite wisdom, to remove from among us, as a dispensation to his Providence, our worthy brother Lewis H. Hamlin; and

Whereas, Although gone from among us, he is not forgotten and those with whom he associated will ever remember his kind and pleasant manner, and will think of him and cherish his name when the world will have forgotten him; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved brother Lewis H. Hamlin, the order has lost a worthy member, the parents a kind and affectionate son, and the community a good and upright citizen; one who in his kind and genial disposition had gained the love and respect of all who knew him.

Resolved, That Charlevoix Tribe No. 327, I. O. G. T., did lose a true social and a worthy brother, whom the lodge lights concerned for his many good qualities and willingness to do all in his power.

Resolved, That this lodge tender to the afflicted parents of our deceased brother their sincere sympathy in this bereavement and assurance that we share in this their great loss and affliction.

Resolved, That the charter and regalia of this lodge be draped in mourning for the space of twenty days, in memory of the deceased.

Resolved, That our Worthy Secretary be instructed to transcribe a copy of these resolutions, under the seal of the lodge, to the parents of the deceased, and also a copy to the Charlevoix Sentinel for publication.

Civil service reformers had much to say about "appointing" when Gen. Grant made his father a postmaster in Kentucky, and gave candor the clear relations some independent and unimportant Government appointments. Those same civil service reformers have always been enthusiastic in their endorsement of President Hayes, and now that he has appointed his own brother-in-law—Stanley Matthews—a Judge of the Supreme Court, are they going to say more, or pull "suspenders?"

NOAH H. SWAYNE, of the U. S. Supreme Court, resigned on the 25th ult., and on the following day the President sent to the Senate the name of Hon. Stanley Matthews, of Cincinnati, as his successor. Many think the President has made a grave mistake of judgment in the nomination of Matthews, and it is quite probable that the Senate will reject the appointment. Judge Swayne was appointed from Ohio by President Lincoln in January, 1862.

GENERAL GARFIELD is a Free Mason of high degree, and is said to be the first Knight Templar elected President. Washington was a Master Mason, and other Presidents have been members of the order. POLITICAL PARAGRAPHS.

Butler has at last tilted the entire Massachusetts Democracy.

Barnum seems to be hunting obituaries rather than the seat which imposed upon him.

The Democrats seem bound to get out of power with a big blunder booming behind them.

The executive jollification over the final secession of the whole of Butler does not offend the ear by its noise.

Governor Cleaver says there will be no Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1884, but that the contest will lie between the Republicans and the Greenbackers.

The Democrats will have no leader in the next Senate, but that will be a gain for them. They would be in better condition looking if they had had no leader for the past two years.

There has been some talk of a new name for the Democracy. General Democracy puts in a title which seems to meet no demands. The converse is deficient in anything except blunders.

Perhaps Barnum does not sell for an investigation of the Morey forgery because he thinks he has a Republican Congress to undertake the job. He has only to remember such a gentleman to have it complied with.

In the Butler, who a year ago exposed to the kingdom of Egypt the folly of his ways, holding the balance of power in the house of representatives, is now sought fingered that his three little votes for United States Senator in the Indiana Legislature have almost as much importance, indeed, as something to be remembered, even if only a little, and as a point of curiosity at that.—N. Y. Times.

The Democratic Evening Alone Explorers institute an investigation striking act of generosity. With the friend of ten years' standing in the Democratic master right under their noses, and with no trace of a particle of fraud about Republican matter, they look of making a report of "looseness in the house of the framing private by both parties." That is what may be called handsome conduct. Let whatsoever Messrs. Cox and Wallace, who charged the Democratic Committee with forging their transcendent names, think about it, they don't they want the rascals hunted down.—N. Y. Tribune.

Senator Butler, of South Carolina, said not long ago that the condition of the South would be greatly improved by a change in the basis of representation as regards a large portion of the negroes in other States. He was in favor of an exodus. The people of his own State don't agree with him. Evidence collected by the Charleston News and Courier shows that there is a scarcity of negro labor in South Carolina that would be relieved if labor has been introduced it has not proved satisfactory, that the negroes are carrying higher wages now than ever before, and that not larger migration now would be a great loss to the State Senator Butler has possibly spent all the war and tear of destroying the negro into an obsession day when he gave his mistaken opinion.

Border-Ruffian Vest.

The conduct of Senator Vest in Congress indicates beyond the possibility of cavil that the core of border ruffianism with more disguised Missouri is not yet entirely in any means, but that one of their number remains who is suspicious of the manifestation of their worth, though he does not flourish revolver and bowie-knife, or heat gauge bout on murderous forays into Kansas. He is a fair representative, nevertheless, of their uniformly irrepressible and hatred of everything Northern and his representation is none the less odious that it is exhibited in that branch of the National Legislature which is assumed to be calm, dignified and deliberative. The National matters, removed from the bickerings of party strife and the impassioned heat of illerations and decisions upon questions not distinctively and necessarily partisan.

Senator Vest has never omitted an opportunity to give expression to his very offensive sentiments in a very offensive manner. Even if his sentiments were not offensive and he were speaking within the line of decency he would be open to criticism as talking too much; but when he cannot rise without assuming the air of a braggadocio, and cannot open his mouth except to vent his spite against the Republican party in particular and the organization as constantly going on with a view to rimination union and greater love among the brethren: where Kelly and Cowger lie down and roll over together, with Whitney and John Cochran them both with a puddle—here is the impression that Senator Vest is of the wonder, holding the balance of power in the house of representatives, was itself to hold the balance of power in the House of Representatives, is now so much suggested that his three little votes for United States Senator in the Indiana Legislature have almost as much importance, indeed, as something to be remembered, even if only a little, and as a point of curiosity at that.—*N. "Saving Dissensions."

A Newfoundland Democratic paper has made the astounding discovery that the policy of the Republican party for 1881 will be to "create dissensions in the Democratic ranks." The Democratic will receive the intelligence with a shock. For although it is well known that the Republican party has revealed a depth of depravity in its treatment of the Democracy that is wholly without parallel in the history of politics, it has not been thought possible that human nature could be so base as deliberately to attempt to disturb the peace and harmony of a party whose unanimity and harmony are at this moment the delight of all good men and the admiration of the world. The infamous conduct of the Republicans in the last campaign, in drawing that General Garfield was a liar, jackpot and thief, and in regarding by believe that he wrote the Morey letter, is well known. For this, however those may be a fitter shadow of opposition, since they had placed him in nomination and had to make a show of standing by him. The next most obstinately wicked as was their behavior in this regard, it did not go to the length of attempting to sow dissension in the ranks of the great and powerful and united party opposed to them.

But it seems as if the quantity for crime grow by what it fed on. From this statement and from the fact that for it comes from a newspaper not easily deceived, one that could not be supposed even by General A. Garfield or Senator Butler's confession, but will believe that Garfield wrote the Morey letter—it appears that the Inhuman Republican conspirators have gone farther even than their previous lunacy and determined to destroy it. Uniting from any other quarter, this should be unwilling to credit the report. Coming from any other source we should be unwilling to credit the report. Coming, however, as it does, we are compelled to believe that partisanship leads to extremes, that we did suspect it had its limits. And now to think that it deliberately proposes to fling the apple of discord into the ranks of the Democracy and break up that happy family—it is too, too much. When we consider this great and united party, cuddled together in a common disaster, oozing over each other in fraternal sympathy, breathing their fingers in each other's hair, and wearing the tenderest of post-offices in terms of mutual endearment, it does not seem possible that such a body of human gasolyger for its nutritiousness correct, it would give him work enough to keep him still and the rest of the year from the odium exhibitions. As he does not seem to be aware that he has one, it is good work with his own section, but is a stench in the nostrils of the North, some would be willing to be accepted in the Senate he inclub he can be inclined to keep his impressions to himself. John Brown's ghost, not to speak of his noble, as made to total ness. It is a bad time for the Democracy to have its disorganization exhibited, and it is a worse time to stimulate union and greater love among the brethren: where Kelly and Cowger lie down and roll over together, with Whitney and John Cochran them both with a puddle—here is the impression that Senator Vest is of his feet and to expose the Senate and the country to a torrent of his silly malice and impotent bluster, when they come up, either directly or indirectly. One of these is any allusion to the services of the Republican party to anything connected with its past, present or future, to anything that belonging to it, or to any claim made by it. The other is the suggestion of any measure that is for the benefit of the whole country, that involves patriotism or that recognizes all sections of the country as parts of one Nation. The mere mention of anything of this kind inflames him as a red rag does a bull, and his antics very closely resemble those of that animal under the excitement to place General Grant upon the retired list has been the object of his special exercise. It was in totally an effort to reward General Grant, first, as a Republican, and second as the man who conquered the Secessionists; and so great is the rage that he not only assails General Grant and Republicans, but goes back a quarter of a century to assail John Brown as a "murderous" who was "justly hung," and the Free-State settlers of Kansas as "lawless banditti" who went there that they might stir up the slaves in Missouri to rise against their masters, and from that point comes down to the present, styling Republicans all the way. From the manner in which his gorge rises at the memory of John Brown, the spirit of the old man of Harper's Ferry, which seems to trouble no one else, must be deriving most of his time in his marching on to annoying Senator Vest, and —Dr. Theodor Cruddelb, the celebrated preacher and professor of theology, at Bonn, in Germany, has been engaged to given a course of lectures on preaching before the students of Yale Theological School in 1882.

—Colored Baptist associations in the West are beginning to take steps for the support of missions in Africa. Organizations have been formed to collect money. Sumtaru associations are already supporting a mission on the west coast of Africa, having sent out missionaries at their own color.

—In time, of Stanford, Conn., died in 1878, leaving a portion of an estate of $110,000 to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. The executrix of The society had feared, however, before his death, and the New York Presbyterian Board of Home Missions claimed it on the ground that they were the successors of the Foreign Board. Recently, The matter was taken into the courts, and it has just been decided that the bequest had lapsed.

—The Boston School Committee has resolved that corporal punishment in the schools ought to be greatly diminished. It is hereafter to be inflicted only by a principal, or by the written order of a principal, or by the written order of a principal, and only on a session subsequent to that at which the offense was committed. The pupil must be told what this is, and the principal must keep a record of all cases. Corporal punishment is absolutely forbidden in the high schools, and with girls in the grammar schools.

—The census of all the organizations which include as a part of their faith and practice the principle of non-combatancy and non-litigation is to be taken shortly. The query, whether Quakers, Mennonites and many other many organizations belong to some church will be included. Dr. Henry Randall Waite, of New York, will have the supervision of the work, and the general part of it will be done by Howard Miller, of Leesburg, Va.

—The Indian School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., has 113 boys and forty-four girls. Of these was started more than 100 of them had never been inside of a school or house, and when brought there were unmanageable and noisy. After three or a half months the boys would recite fairly in geography and in arithmetic. They learned the use of tools as readily as white children, and some have already become good wagon-makers, blacksmiths, carpenters and shoemakers.

Enemies of Spiders.

The well-known naturalist, the Rev. H. E. McCook, of Philadelphia, has begun a study of the habits and economy of the spiders, which he designated as the most benevolent of insects. Among the principal enemies of the spider he mentioned many of those insignificant flies, the bees, wasps, etc., which produce flesh-eating grubs. Large numbers of spiders are lost in these species as food. The nest of one of these forms was exhausted, built of silk in such a manner as to resemble the pipes of Pan. When opened, these cells were found filled with the bodies of different species. They were all paralyzed by the fly, but not killed, and in this state of suspended animation they remain until the hatching out of the grubs, which eagerly devour their captive after the other. The unfortunate spider lives in the large cells of the nest, showing no sign of secession and manifesting no resistance. Other flies, and among these may be included the common black house fly, prey upon spiders by destroying the cocoons or by sucking the contents of their eggs when they happen to be uncovered or only slightly protected. The eggs are also devoured in large numbers by birds. Some species of birds assist in preventing the spread of spiders by making use of their webs, especially the thicker portion used in the construction of the cocoons, to build their nests. A bird's nest was exhibited composed of this material in such quantity as to indicate the destruction of a great many webs. These synonymous interests which deposit their eggs in the cocoons of the spiders are, however, their most destructive enemies. When the young are hatched they attack theeggs and young of their hosts and consume them as food, until sufficiently developed to obtain their nourishment.

Would Not Pay Duty.

Marie Van Zandt relates this droll incident, which happened while returning from Germany to France: Passing with the gamtlet at the Custom-house. I had no cigars, and was therefore unprepared to answer the usual question, "Have you anything on my paying duty? For they hate the French, you see, and meant to take revenge on my nose! Reaves, when before the hated nose, but this stirred up American blood, and, mildly but firmly, I refused their extortionate demand, and declared I could not, should not and would not give them up. The argument was getting quite serious, when, thinking that an explanation of how I came by them might be soothing and having exhaustedmy German I tossing my head back and I gave them a little trill, then a liuitated applause and threw the bouquets up and caught them again. The gruff old fellow grunted and smiled and motioned for me to pass on. The idea had penetrated!"

—At Niagara Falls the "Horseshoe" is frozen solid for 200 feet from either shore. Mounds of stalactites, large icicles and the immense spray are constantly making their way upward and have now attained a height of more than 100 feet.

For Young Readers.

THAT TROUBLESOME SISTER.

She hears all our books,
And breaks all my toys;
She always spoils bedtime
By calling for boys.
Ace of for me, I'm sure,
Sometime, if I'm so saved
I don't know what to do.

She's just as wooden-headed counting and sly
That there's nothing here for her to find.
That dear little troublesome sister of mine.

Whenever I go
She's right at my heels,
And if I throw a snowball
My apple she steals.
And when I'm in the door,
The minute I get started
She comes and tells mother.

But then she's as sweet and as pretty and coy,
And has such winning ways every day,
That dear little troublesome sister of mine.

If I cut my finger,
She stops my crying,
And kisses the sore place,
And looks very wise,
As if she had cured it
And when at night
I'm tired and sleepy,
She sings me a song.

I think she's very bit sweet and good,
Now don't there just come and tell her or mind.
The cause of the comforting state of mind
Rural H. Brand.

PURE, PEACEFUL, GENTLE, TRUE AND BRAVE.

An Arab sheik, owner of a hundred camels, three wives, three sons and a thousand sheep, always kept his encampment at some distance from his kinsmen. He had three sons and four daughters, who, as they grew, were reared in the strict manner and sense of that country, so careful was their training, as through their accomplishments, and so pure their life.

One evening, when the father and his eldest son were feasting with the encampment, having ridden nearly seven hours on horseback, and camels which had strayed, the boy asked permission to speak, and then asked his father why he had not taken him to the battles were fed twice day to day on dates and bread, with a strip of dry meat at noon; when the boys and girls in neighboring encampments shared the luxury of fresh meat, and cakes at darkness. If your clothing is simpler than your kinsmen's, it is that you may be more ready to valor in the fight. If your heart is true, your child will know his God. My son, pray for your children, that they may not die forgetful.

And he turned his face to the west, and he did pray. And the sons and the chiefs known as the Five Stars of Koreishite—pure, peaceful, gentle, true and brave.—Edwin F. Gate, in Oldchoice's Appeal.

A Quiet Old City.

On the sloping side of a hill, just where the shallow fall commences from the high peaks, is built the quaint old city of Shut-up-town. Indeed, the whole hill on the south hemisphere of the moon is covered with it. Indeed, I cannot remember where I first went. I like the place so much, and have become so used to going there, that I feel very much like a stranger when I am anywhere else. Everything is quiet and sometimes one cross if I fail to take my usual journey to the city early in the day. Even the city of Shut-eye-town was never sing, or laugh, or go to sleep, or do anything but ponder while the quaint old city of Shut-up-town. Its houses are small and lined with soft cushions. Feathers, the down of the most queer shapes and sizes. The people who live there are like plants in their long white robes. They are exceedingly peaceable, and always quiet. Even their children are not noisy. They never have any fights or even a quarrel inside the city. Outside the walls of Shut-up-town, however, there is a different state of affairs. But spending money to increase the power of the school-house that's another thing.

We must not dwell at length on other prevalent school-house defects which this report sets in the pillory. There is the faulty arrangement of desks and blackboards in reference to the light, or more correctly the faulty location of the windows themselves, by which more or less eyes are sure to be injured.

Not one reporter's provision for drying wet clothing in bad weather. Then there are the instruments of torture in the shape of desks that are a premium on spine deformities and chest diseases and of seats "uniform in height and inconvenience" that are too high for younger toes to touch the floor and too low for older legs to rest unsupported, and so "are miraculously uncomfortable all around." What shall be said of the school-house whose seats are "unable to accommodate the grown people who use the building for church purposes?" The discomfort resulting to torture which the children suffer from unsuitable seats at school is something which can only be remembered—it cannot be imagined or described.—School Economy.

Rich Men of Former Days and How They Spend Their Money.

We occasionally read interesting accounts of the extravagant and luxurious expenditures of our railway kings and union kings and other millionaires, but there is a certain fascination in these descriptions of immense possessions and their lavish expenditure every where. Some six hundred reports were received from twelve to fifteen hundred correspondents in reference to as many school buildings in all parts of the State. To start with it was found that eighty-two per cent. the first and essential condition of a healthful school-house—that of pure water—was not supplied in the school-houses "had been placed in a position whereby they could be easily and economically supplied with all the requirements of life in a healthful manner." The common mistake in these cases—if so unlucky as to be called by a polite name—is in selecting a site on low ground and near stagnant ponds or miasmatic marshes, or where for lack of drainage the surface water stood after or even during rainy seasons by evaporation.

In the important matter of ventilation—the eighty-two per cent. of these school-houses—taking the reports from city as well as country—depended upon doors and windows for the supply of fresh air. In cold weather, when every thing else to be done, a like committee is appointed and these two committees meet, if they agree on a report, then the bill as reported is voted on again in both Houses. If they disagree, each reports, and sometimes a new committee is appointed and sometimes the bill fails. But if it passes both Houses, then the President signs it, if he approves; if he disapproves he sends it back to the House in which it originated, with his objections. If that House passes it again by a two-thirds vote it goes to the other branch of Congress, and if it passes there by a two-thirds vote it becomes a law. There is no stricter between any of the parties.

—Emerson says that no book should be read until it is a year old. The British Museum takes up the Sage of Concord's motto and goes him one better. That institution proposes to withhold all works of fiction from the reading-room until three years after they are published.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A meal of peas, wheat and corn for cows will make the richest milk and of a yellow color.

—Put one or two red peppers, or a few pieces of charcoal into a pot where ham, cabbage, etc., is boiling, and the house will not be filled with the offensive odor.

—Irish Potato Pie.—One pound mashed potatoes rubbed through a colander; one-half pound butter, creamed with sugar; six eggs, white and yolks separately; one lemon, squeezed into the potatoes while hot; one cupful of cream, one teaspoonful of nutmeg and the same of mace; two cupfuls white sugar, bake in open shells of paste; to be eaten cold.

—To Remove Ink Stains from Linen.—Moisten the linen and put on the stain a thin paste of cassia sold ground up in water. Leave it on a few minutes and wash it out. If the stain is not all removed repeat the application, then wash thoroughly with pure soap. Obtain a package of this powder, for the housekeeping ladies may use any other substance with which to wipe the perspiration from her pretty face. I have often heard her say "Paper," and seen the ground berry found with the delicate napkins of soft white tissue.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

—In choosing a profession or business, whether as a means of profit or for recreation to health, the natural inclinations and aptitudes should always be considered. No one should engage in a business for which he has a dislike, as such will most surely result in failure. No one should work at anything when ill health or any other cause inclines against it. Such proceedings is a waste of vitality, and continued under under such conditions are never successful. The mind and body must work in harmony in order to produce good results. —Dr. Foote's Health Monthly for February.

—The Protestants of Germany are beginning to prepare to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the birth of Luther, which occurs November 10, 1883. The principal celebration will be held at Wittenberg, where Luther completed his translation of the Bible. A general committee has been formed, of which Dr. Rotter, burgomaster of Eisenach, is chairman.

—The Rev. E. F. Hammond, the Evangelist, has been holding revival meetings in Manchester for several weeks. He has preached at Winnipeg, Emerson and three other places. Those in the open air, with the thermometer twenty-five degrees below zero, and it is estimated that there have only been from one thousand conversions.

—[St. Louis Republican.]

It is very rare that the Republican consents to editorially favor the interests of advertisers of what are known as patent medicines, but it does not frequently have one come to it before knowledge of their merits. However, we take pleasure in saying of Rome six from individual experience, that it is a most excellent remedial agent, and as such we can heartily recommend it.

[Inverness News.]

The Madison (Wis.) Democrat, in endeavoring to treat the wounds received by the candidates for the Presidency, wisely prescribes St. Jacobs Oil. Of course we could not expect our worthy contemporary to do otherwise than recommend that famous Old German Remedy, which "heals all wounds but those of the heart," and soothes all pains, save those of political disappointment.

"I Don't Want That Stuff."

is what a lady of Boston said to her husband when he brought home some medicine to cure her of sick headache and enviable which had made her miserable for fourteen years. As the result showed, it was administered to her with such good results that she continued to use that and was so enthusiastic in its praise that she induced twenty-five of her friends to try it for sick headache which is to their credit be it said they found a Big Bottle.—Standard.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, FEB. 15, 1881.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

THE State of Florida has made a contract with some Philadelphia and Pacific coast capitalists to drain Lake Okeechobee, in South Florida. If the scheme is carried out, 12,000,000 acres of the best sugar land in the world will be reclaimed. The territory reclaimed will include the celebrated Everglades, and will be in extent twice as large as the state of New Jersey. This is the largest contract on record, and when completed Florida can produce more sugar than the United States now consumes.

THE polarctic contest which closed at New York last Saturday evening was, in some respects, the most extraordinary on record. The last recorded time ever made was made by Hughes, 5682 miles in six days, with two hours and a half to spare. Had he walked till midnight, he might easily have made 575 miles. The last previous six days score is 540 miles. Two others took ready over 500 miles each, an unusual number. Eight thousand dollars in prizes is divided among the five men who made over 500 miles each.

The Inman Gazette: The arrears of pensions will be begun within an estimate that it will take somewhere from $9,000,000 to $15,000,000. When Secretary Sherman stated that it would take $50,000,000, he was assailed as hostile. It is now stated that it will take $50,000,000, and about thirty times more than its authors estimated. The means were then available for an approximate estimate of the results. Where were the leaders of the government when it struck the treasury and the taxpayers for this enormous sum, thinking it was making claims for only about $15,000,000? There was a time when the Democratic party said the Nation could not carry the war debt, and when many Republicans were weak on it; but here is $50,000,000 added to it without knowing it. The Nation is liable to be plunged into bankruptcy by Congress in some idle moment.

THE new administration and the next Congress are not likely to go to sleep for want of important public questions to occupy their attention. A long list of such questions might be made out. The New York Tribune enumerates a few that will occur in every one that keeps track of current newspaper discussion: Inter-oceanic transit, embracing the railway and canal plans, the improvement of the Mississippi River; Divergent Telegraphy; the Revival of American Ocean Commerce, the Extermination of Polygamy in Utah; the Election of New States from our Western Territories; the Silver Question including efforts at International Bimetalism and the Abandonment of the Standard Silver dollar; Postal Savings Banks; a Constitutional Amendment Authorizing a National Marriage and Divorce Laws; an Amendment providing a way to Force Repudiating States to pay their Debts; a Revision of the Tariff to Simplify and Improve the Protective System; the Strengthening of the Federal Election Laws so as to Protect the Rights of Citizens to a free ballot and a fair count. To these we may add Reapportionment and Refunding in case these matters are not disposed of by the present Congress.

Speech of Mr. Blaine in the United States Senate.

"I think the severest strain to which the country was ever subjected outside of the war of the rebellion was in the incidents connected with the settlement of the Presidency in 1876, and I doubt whether if the term had been for a period of ten years this country could have found and entirely peaceful solution. I say that for the benefit of the gentlemen who think we ought to have a longer Presidential term. If that had been for a ten years' settlement of the Presidency I do not believe we could have had as peaceful an adjustment as we happily reached. We got the advantage of a short term of four years, giving a period in the near future in which the case might be tried over again before the high court of the people. The shorter the term the more content the people are to submit. That is why the states that have had annual elections have had the most peaceful administrations in the country, and why they have had the most peaceful contests. I believe the honorable Senator from Connecticut and myself will both live to see with regret that the New England States are giving up their old system of annual elections and resorting to the biennial period. I believe the annual election of Governor and Legislature in those states has contributed very largely to the peacefulness and harmony and success of their administrations, as well as to the general readiness and humbleness of submission to the result by the defeated party. If beaten this year, in only twelve months you can try it again, and with one or two notable exceptions there has been very little excitement or disorder consequent upon the result. I am very sure, at all events, that there has been less of unhealthy and dangerous excitement in states that have had annual elections than in any other states in the Union, and I believe the best in proportion as you elongate and lengthen the term of service of Presidents of the United States, just in the same proportion will there be extraordinary agitation attendant upon it. If it were a ten years term, elected as the House of Representatives is, bearing the imprint as the executive ought of the popular branch of Congress, there would be less excitement than there is now. Make the term six, eight or ten years, and you increase the excitement exactly in the same ratio. Now we have a four years' term; it is not likely to be changed, certainly not within the lifetime of this generation, but four years to men who have reached forty, and fifty, and sixty years, comes around very rapidly. It comes around rapidly to all. It will be nine very soon again, and it will approach to that side of the December and to this to the Senator from Ohio, and to myself, and to all of us, if there be not something done to relieve the country from the appreciation of what is caused in 1876, and what may occur again if no wise foresight be taken to prevent it."

JAMES G. FAIR, recently elected as Sharon's successor as United States Senator from Nevada, was one of the original quartette of "Bonanza Princes" of the Pacific coast. He was born December 3, 1831, in Chanton, Devonshire, England. He came to this country in 1843 with his parents, and for some time he resided at Geneva, Ill., where he attended school. At Chicago he received a good business education. In 1849 he went to California, and he has ever since been engaged in mining. In 1867 he became superintendent of the Hale & Norcross mine in Nevada. It was during their connection with the latter mine that the "Bonanza Princes" made the first explosion of their enormous fortunes. These were known to Flood, James G. Fair, Wm. S. O'Brien and J. W. Mackay—secured control of several mining claims, which are now known as the Consolidated and Consolidated Virginia mines. Mr. Fair being the managing spirit in the movement. From these and other mines, and from real estate speculations, Mr. Fair has accumulated an immense fortune, being assessed in California alone for $7,000,000. Although the owner of so much wealth, Mr. Fair is still a hard worker, and may be seen about the mines almost any day in his miners costume. In politics he is a conservative and independent Democrat. He is five feet and eight inches in height, and weighs 207 pounds. He wears a long, flowing black beard, cigars and shoes with zero, and has a florid complexion. He was married in 1861, and has a family of two boys and two girls.

New York Letter.

NEW YORK, FEB. 9, 1881.

In spite of good times generally, and the prospect of better when the weather's broke up a little and the streets become passable, we have some sensational commercial catastrophes to prevent us forgetting former consequences of recklessness or dishonesty. The tobacco trade has suffered from some very heavy failures; the domestic wine trade has received a knockdown by the suspension of the Urbana Wine Co., of which the genial host of one of the famous hostelries of Long Branch, Hildreth, is president, and even the high-toned dry goods trade has been disgraced by a swell who not satisfied with doing a good business and investing the notes of his fellows, forged $20,000 in notes, which he got cleared in Wall street, raised his running partners and deserted his family, leaving them in penniless and heartbroken. This last was such a senseless piece of business, committed, as it were, without the excellent temptation that it would almost argue insanity in the man who would then throw himself away.

Apparently discouraged by the Arctic temperature which has prevailed, the cackling pullets of our neighboring farms are very where within railroad reach of several hundred miles, have cut short their supply of eggs. It is scandalous to see how many disappointed applicants are forced to dip their red noses into whiskey straights, when they have vainly called for Tom and Jerry. A shrewd caterer for hotels and saloons realizes more than a turkey on toast, and we are in built off for oysters. There is a regular famine in the mouldiest bivalve, and the best are coming in sparingly, and from the Superior accounts of the whole-sale freezing up of numerous banks of them, it looks as if oysters would be about as valuable as pearls before long. This sort of weather may not the ice men, but the rest of us think the original "Old Probs" arranged matters somewhat better than his successor.

When Patterfamilias has got through paying his Christmas bills, and even if comfortable of long notes bought at the same time before Christmas and now due, he finds himself in the unpleasant position of the unlucky player in the game of "Hearts," who, at the end of the evening, finds himself loaded with the queen of spades, the ace of spades, and all the spades in the pack. Such a man is usually ready to welcome any scheme of insurance against the recurrence of such a fate. Hence the Mutual Life Insurance Co. customed just about this time to publish a statement of their affairs to the general and possibly foreign. I have before me now their usual statement of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. It is easily the grandest corporate institution of any kind, bar none, in the world, as assets, surrounded clouds, will, a very liberal margin of surplus, depreciation in any of its very substantially placed investments, supposing the unprecedented sum of $91,735,776.29.

Many farmers are of course out of their contributors of industry or confidence, but this company does not look for light notes a bushel, although it doesn't find it necessary to handle notes by the dozen to make all returns to it. It has been before the community for many years and the prudence of its management has been so long married and thoroughly understood by multitudes than the gnome of its leading spirits, of whom President Winston is a household word in the months of thousands generally. Its methods have been patent to all, and have been characterized by liberality on the one hand, wholly eschewing the vice of litigating claims except in cases of palpable fraud, and strict economy on the other, having the cheapest rates. It refunded the premiums fifteen per cent four years since upon a proceeding which has met with the result of an increase of the assets in the past year of $2,000,000, necessitating $1,356,506, and have been paid out during the year to policy holders.

Money tells, and I may safely say that the record is simply unexcelled. So far as your Rosie is concerned, he is very thoroughly determined to go no farther, for he might increase all, not quite so well as with his good friends of the old Mutual.

The good Louis Bergh, P. P. O. T. G. A. S. S. E. T. P. D. C. T. A. &c., has been trotting round busily to get signatures for two bills which he is anxious to have presented at Albany to be legislated one case is against the dissection of animals, and is consistent enough, though the doctors still seem to think it necessary, in order to widen their knowledge to the possible future benefit of mankind, and have severally set on Mr. Bergh. Congress.

In the Senate on the 1st Mr. Morgan, from the Committee on the State of the Union, in regard to the threatened Cuban expedition, made quite a constitution on that subject, with a substitute amendment providing that both houses of Congress shall assemble in joint session this day (Sunday), to be presided over by the President of the Senate, and jointly participate in the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and "Provided, That the votes so to be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote as thus declared and the persons having been elected. The amendment was tested by the yeas and nays, and was rejected—yeas 25, nays 31. Mr. Hoar proposed, with a recommendation that they be adopted, two amendments to the bill to appropriate for the Interior Department Appropriation bill for 1880.

Mr. Morgan's substitute for the House bill was reported the day before as a substitute for the bill legally providing for the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and for the decision of questions arising thereon, was taken up in the Senate on the 30 and, at Mr. Morgan's suggestion, was read for information. Mr. Hoar said he would not discuss the bill at length, but would content himself with a few words. He thought the bill was unwise and unnecessary, for the reason that the two houses of Congress, by the Constitution, were charged with the duty of counting the votes for President and Vice President, and he thought they should have the power to perform that duty. He thought the substitute was unconstitutional, for the reason that the legislation and appropriate action of Congress as provided by the second section of the bill, commanding an appropriation of $300,000 for the expenses of the Electoral Commission, and the Supreme Justices, was the exercise of legislation by one house of Congress. The House bill was adopted by a vote of 31 to 25, and the Senate bill was then taken up and passed by a similar majority, the vote being on party lines. The House bill was then taken up and passed by a similar vote, which was agreed to—yeas 31, nays 25. The House bill provides for the appointment of the Supreme Justices, and for the report of the Electoral Commission, and for the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, by the Commission. In accordance with the provisions of the House bill, the Senate bill was passed

Congress.

In the Senate on the 1st Mr. Morgan, from the Committee on the Library of the Army of the Cumberland, reported Mr. Ingalls' resolution to refer to the Committee on Military Affairs the claim of Mrs. Lincoln for the use of the Executive Mansion, providing that both houses of Congress shall assemble in joint convention on the 8th, to be presided over by the President of the Senate, and jointly participate in terminating the record of the Electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and declaring the result; and directing the President of the Senate, when the result is declared and the powers thereby limited. The agreement was then to be printed. The Interior Appropriation bill was considered and passed. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to provide for the payment of the money recommended that they be refunded. The Chinese immigration bill was taken up on the question of concurring in the House joint amendments.

Mr. Morgan's Mexican claims resolution, reported the day before as a substitute for Mr. Ingalls' proposition, were taken up in the Senate on the 2d, and, on Mr. Morgan's motion, were amended in many essential respects, made applicable to claims of all nations, and then, as amended, passed—42 to 1—Messrs. Allison, Blair, Booth, Conkling, Hoar, Hill, Hoar and Jones, Nev., voting with the latter. In the House the Senate bill for the relief of Mrs. Lincoln was reported from the Judiciary Committee, with a recommendation that it do not pass. Mr. Hiscock, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the Senate bill to refund the direct tax, with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in. Mr. Hiscock explained that the bill was passed by the House at the last session, but was defeated in the Senate, practically by a filibuster. He thought the House should make a few of the concessions to the Senate, instead of "as the Senate, instead of "as the Senate, instead of "as

As to Carpet-Baggers.

The twelve States of the South contain in round numbers 486,000,000 acres of land. Of this only 185,000,000 acres are embraced in farms, and of the acreage of these farms 70 per cent. is unimproved, or last only 50,000,000 acres are actually cultivated. There were at the time referred to thirty-six acres of land to every individual of the population; yet there are fourteen people to every farm. In other words, there were 10,000,000 people and less than 300,000 farms. And this, it must be remembered, in a section having no great cities and few towns. Yet eight-ninths of the soil was unimproved.

Here were waste land and landless labor lying side by side. Is it strange the Yankee sought to take advantage of the seeming opportunity? If the spirit of enterprise, welcome and generous rivalry which obtains at the West had manifested itself at the South, the years between 1865—the close of the war—and 1870 would have witnessed an immigration to the South never equaled by the ever-flowing westward tide. It would have numbered by hundreds of thousands, if not millions. Such a result would have been but natural. But what was it? More than how many were the number of the "carpet-baggers" who threw "overran the South?" Comparing the returns of the census, we shall find that, while in the year 1860 there were 119,915 persons in these States who were born north of Mason and Dixon's line, in 1870 there were 190,611 of Northern birth resident in the Confederacy, showing an increase of 70,696 in the population of "Northern larvæ." This gives a total 1,000 settlers to 1,700,000 of the population, or one to 1,000—seventh of one per cent. In North Carolina there were 2,141 more than in 1860 to South Carolina, 172 more than there were under the old slave regime. Yet they were both "overrun." In Georgia there were 12,000 and odd less than at the close or beginning of the decade. Yet they were also "overrun." In Florida there were 1,000 counties, so that the immigrant must have amounted to no less than 10 per cent. when the counting of male and female, or perhaps as much as 20 voters. No constituent Solid-Southern compares them to the scourge of locusts which overran Egypt, and have been quoted as a terrible infliction. In the whole South there was perhaps an accession of 3,000 voters, an average of 220 to a State, or about 2 to a county. In the Southern States were not less than 10,000 State and county officers, judges, legislators and Congressmen, and at least twice as many Magistrates and other subordinate municipal officers—a total of 30,000 in all. Of these all! It would seem as if the time had come at which the prophet spake when "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight."

But when we come to apply the test to particular cases it becomes still more ridiculous. The number of Northern men that went to almost any one State and remained till 1868, when the first Republican governments were organized, was so small that they were nearly all known to each other. Here is one example. How more active, energetic men—if that there is no other story to tell—ever lived than "the" The fact that the largest part of the wealth and intelligence of the South arrayed itself at once in deadly and unremitting hostility to the reconstruction policy of the time is the real life many of these men who would otherwise never have dreamed of engaging in it. Almost every one of them had held a commission in the Federal army, and many of them were honorable marks of service thereon. I know very few of them who went there under Federal appointment. I do not remember that any of them held office under the Johnson Provisional Government from 1865 to 1868. Upon the organization of the State Government of North Carolina in July, 1868, out of the eight officers chosen in the State ticket two "carpet-baggers" were elected; there was one Judge out of seventeen, and eight Legislators out of 170, and perhaps twelve or fifteen Clerks or Sheriffs and county officers in the various counties—though I can now speak positively as to only nine out of the 100 elected in the State. Of the 5,000 Justices of the Peace, Constables and other minor municipal officers, I presume there may have been a dozen or two more of the "larvæ" selected.

The impression largely prevails, and is given countenance by the Solid-Southrons, that only negroes and "carpet-baggers" were to be found in the Republican party of the South. The following table of the proportion of white and colored people in the different ex-Confederate States will show the fallacy of this idea:

State.	White.	Col'd.	State.	White.	Col'd.
Alabama	1	1	N. Carolina	2	1
Arkansas	2	1	S. Carolina	1	1
Florida	2	1	Tennessee	3	1
Georgia	2	1	Texas	4	1
Louisiana	1	1	Virginia	2	1
Mississippi	1	1	W. Virginia	15	1

In only three of those States, to-wit: South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, could the solid colored vote, with the insignificant contingent of Northern immigrants since the war, turn the scale against the solid white vote.

But this irruption of the Northmen who "overran" the Southlands seems all the more infinitesimal when we come to compare it with Kansas, which alone, during the same period, received more than eighty thousand "carpet-baggers" "large" from the Southern States—three times as many men, just as hungry for office, just as greedy of spoils, and a far greater proportion of them consisting of those who left their country for their country's good since that State has been a nursery of runaway "moonshiners" and Ku-Klux. Yet plucky little Kansas is not "overrun." She still counts her white arms and cries, "Come one, come all!" She welcomes alike the 15,000 white Kentucky carpet-baggers and the 50,000 colored refugees from the "bull-dozer's" paradise, who sought her borders last year, and still is not "overrun." The soul of John Brown still marches on in the State of Osawatomie, and advertises every day for more "larvæ."—From Judge Tourgee's letter to N. Y. Tribune.

It is estimated that the population of Vienna is 1,200,000.

A Sound Thrashing.—Beating a drum.

Standing by their Friends.

The Connecticut statesman who, upon being congratulated upon his nomination to high office in the last campaign, bemoaned his ungrateful enemies in the exclamation: "Curse a man who ever stand by his friends," has imitators in South Carolina. But they carry friendship further in South Carolina than in Connecticut. Down there they are ready to stand by friends not only before election but after, and only when friends come offering honors, but when they come in the sheriff's custody, seeking sympathy and bail. The case that calls for "standing by" in South Carolina is this: Some three or four hundred of the most active and efficient Democrats in that State—Democrats who were not mean enough to cast with the charging the single letter of duty by voting ours, but whose ambition it was to make one vote of a high-toned white Democrat go as far as four or five ordinary black Republicans, and who labored to that end—have been arrested and are to be tried before the United States Circuit Court for what is termed, and no doubt technically are, violations of the Election law. The charge which "standing by" counts for something. There men need it more than the fellows who drag a man into accepting a nomination he does not want and then sets to, to extol defeat, next championship. For in the view of those behind the bars the Democratic party in the State? The very everywhere" was for a Democratic victory, or could not be called for was done. Those persons have been arrested for doing it. "It's a matter," says the Neos, "whether they are innocent or guilty; we must stand by them, for their cause is ours." Could loyalty be more brazen, or defiance more audacious? It will be well to bear this circumstance in mind. There will be use for it hereafter. For although we may not concern ourselves with the frauds and outrages by which a minority control the State of South Carolina, or may dismiss it with the reflection that a majority that cannot assert itself deserves no sympathy, there is another point of view from which the action of South Carolina does concern the whole people. Two Senators from South Carolina give a minority party the majority in the Senate; and it is quite possible for that State to decide the political complexion of Congress and even elect the President. It is thus conceded that a minority can and directly concern them, when a State is carried by violence and fraud, and the party profiting thereby openly encourages and defends it. The South Carolina Democracy are not only claiming the right to overrule a majority in their own State, but the right to give a minority the control of Congress and the country. It is not a new thing for them to do. It has not worked well heretofore, and will not now.—N. Y. Tribune.

☞ That framing fraud investigation has been tucked away to sleep. Somebody seems to have given it a dose of narcotics.

The Attempt to Assassinate President Jackson.

President Jackson's life, owing to the nature of some of the political measures urged by him, and the depressing effect they for the time had upon the business interests of the country, was often threatened. He was twice attacked, but once only with murderous intent. This occurred January 30, 1835. The President was attending at the Capitol, the funeral of the Hon. Warren R. Davis, a late Representative in Congress from South Carolina. While stepping out upon the portico, holding the arm of Mr. Woolbury, the Secretary of the Navy, he was confronted by a stranger who, at the distance of eight feet, deliberately leveled a pistol at him and fired the trigger. The weapon missed fire. He dropped it and instantly drew another, which also [illegible] The President [illegible] desperate design [illegible] Mr. Woolbury [illegible] toward him, [illegible] and, [illegible] case, but before [illegible] Lawrence, [illegible] and knocked the assassin down and disarmed him. He was taken to jail, and proved to be a young Englishman named Lawrence, a housepainter by occupation, but long out of employment; and, like Bellingham, who stabbed Mr. Perceval, the British Prime Minister, in 1811, attributed his business misfortunes to the Government, and believed himself appointed to some work of Sovereign Providence for the redress of oppression—presented for right, summary sake.

The action proposed by the Charleston News, the leading Democratic organ in the State—that it might be held objectionable in lawsbiding communities—seems but another form of the salvation of law-breakers who hold to the fine old maxim of honor among thieves that it will not do to be accessory to rogues and criminals principals, no matter how much they may be in the standing by each other. "It is immaterial," says the Charleston paper, "whether an act be right or wrong out of guilty." A higher or bolder stand than this could hardly be taken by a State in which white people with their colored allies, it is said, are to say, "were determined that the victory of 1876 and 1878 should be regained and made complete, as it was by a majority of the legal votes cast." Nor was it so done. That is to say, "theory everywhere" in the Democratic party, of course, it will hardly be pretended that anybody outside that party understanding a question of the "victories of 1876 and 1878"—was that the principles upon which alone popular government can exist, and should be trodden underfoot, the law disregarded and contemptuously violated, and a majority of the legal voters stifled. No other construction is possible. And other outrages are claimed to have been committed in four hundred seceded persons did. This is their offense, and this is what the Democrats of South Carolina propose to stand by them in, and justify them for doing it.

"It would be unutterably base," continues the same courageous defender of crime, "to deny to those who are in danger, in consequence of public devotion and personal prominence, that aid and encouragement, our support, and any sort of succor that is necessary. Here we have not only the essence of chivalry—the chivalry that demands and exacts the confidence of honor and the pride itself upon not deserving the desertion of those who do its bidding—but a frank avowal as well of the path and substance of Democratic duty. The true doctrine of Democracy is that the party must carry elections, no matter by what means, they may be carried. Here at the North, where they have votes enough to carry an election without fraud, though not perhaps to the same extent, there has been less willingness to stand by and defend them publicly. The party has reaped the benefits of crimes of this sort, but always shirked the consequences. In South Carolina, they do differently. There they openly assert the right of the minority to rule and boldly defend the lawlessness by which their purpose is accomplished. Says this Democratic organ, after avowing that "it is immaterial whether the accused are innocent or guilty," "the cause of the recessed Democrats must be the cause of the entire people of South Carolina whatever comes of it." By "the people of South Carolina" is meant, of course, the Democratic party of that State.

Here now is the very essence of frankness. The meaning is not attempted to be clouded or disguised. It is not necessary to read between the lines to find it. There may have been a question in the minds of some persons at the North, whether elections in South Carolina were actually such a burlesque and fraud as they seemed to be reported, but can any doubt remain after reading these utterances of the leading Democratic organ in the State? "The cry everywhere" was for a Democratic victory, and what was called for was done. Those persons have been arrested for doing it. "It's a matter," says the News, "whether they are innocent or guilty; we must stand by them, for their cause is ours." Could lawlessness be more brazen, or defiance more audacious? It will be well to bear this circumstance in mind. There will be use for it hereafter. For although we may not concern ourselves with the frauds and outrages by which a minority control the State of South Carolina, or may dismiss it with the reflection that a majority that cannot assert itself deserves no sympathy, there is another point of view from which the action of South Carolina does concern the whole people. Two Senators from South Carolina give a minority party the majority in the Senate; and it is quite possible for that State to decide the political complexion of Congress and even elect the President. It is thus conceded that a minority can and directly concern them, when a State is carried by violence and fraud, and the party profiting thereby openly encourages and defends it. The South Carolina Democracy are not only claiming the right to overrule a majority in their own State, but the right to give a minority the control of Congress and the country. It is not a new thing for them to do. It has not worked well heretofore, and will not now.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Connecticut statesman who, upon being congratulated upon his nomination to high office in the last campaign, bemoaned his ungrateful enemies in the exclamation: "Curse a man who ever stand by his friends," has imitators in South Carolina. But they carry friendship further in South Carolina than in Connecticut. Down there they are ready to stand by friends not only before election but after, and only when friends come offering honors, but when they come in the sheriff's custody, seeking sympathy and bail. The case that calls for "standing by" in South Carolina is this: Some three or four hundred of the most active and efficient Democrats in that State—Democrats who were not mean enough to cast with the charging the single letter of duty by voting ours, but whose ambition it was to make one vote of a high-toned white Democrat go as far as four or five ordinary black Republicans, and who labored to that end—have been arrested and are to be tried before the United States Circuit Court for what is termed, and no doubt technically are, violations of the Election law. The charge which "standing by" counts for something. There men need it more than the fellows who drag a man into accepting a nomination he does not want and then sets to, to extol defeat, next championship. For in the view of those behind the bars the Democratic party in the State? The very everywhere" was for a Democratic victory, and what was called for was done. Those persons have been arrested for doing it. "It's a matter," says the News, "whether they are innocent or guilty; we must stand by them, for their cause is ours." Could lawlessness be more brazen, or defiance more audacious? It will be well to bear this circumstance in mind. There will be use for it hereafter. For although we may not concern ourselves with the frauds and outrages by which a minority control the State of South Carolina, or may dismiss it with the reflection that a majority that cannot assert itself deserves no sympathy, there is another point of view from which the action of South Carolina does concern the whole people. Is the Australian Bush.

A New South Wales letter to the London Telegraph says: I was talking although his back scrub the other day horribly hot, when I saw something shining on a tree which naturally excited my curiosity. I rode up to it through the long grass, scaring away at the same time a flock of crows and hawks, while four iguanas scuttled up the adjoining trees. The shining object proved to be a tin "billy," and underneath, at the foot of a great pine with its head resting on a log, was an unfortunate traveler quite dead. He had been dead for two days, I should think, and was evidently one of the army o workers who braved the length and breadth of this continent on foot, seeking employment, and for weeks and months seeking in vain. This poor fellow must have traveled in our pathless shrub for days coming back in the ever fatal circle so well known to dwellers in the wilderness, to the great pine where he lay down at last, weary and hungry, to await the end which he must have known to be near. Tressel on the "billy," with the point of a knife, I think, were the initials "H. A. E. P.," and the words, "Lord Jesus, receive my soul," were found no papers about him, no clue. He was quite young, too, about twenty-five years of age. I buried a great log on the great tree—a trooper, who knows from long struggle, I mean—knowledge read the burial service; he was rolled in his blankets and a few sheets of bark, and laid on the grass, there to rest till the universal call. Also how small is the actual sum of human life, and how many nameless wanderers—each perhaps the pride of a fond mother and the hope of a family of friends—have lain down to death in the Australian bush, where (as no hotels then), when the first thing in the morning you had to get a glass of "sip." Flip was simply cream, beer, which was served up in large mugs. Every individual had an iron rod about two feet long with a ball on the end about the size of a walnut, which was heated red-hot in the fire, and then was put into the beer, which hissed it and made it foam. This was called "flip." Afterdrinking for the music struck up and there was a dance and those who did not desire to dance and those who did not desire to dance and those who did not desire to

An English View of Us.

It is always pleasant to know what our neighbors think of us, when they think well of us, and for this reason we reprint the above as editorial article from the London Times of a recent date comment ing upon the growth, progress, and status of this country as shown by the census return for 1880. It is an article which may be read with pride, as it comes from a power which hitherto has been rather disparaging their backstory, and its tendency will be to promote friendly feeling and to call out a sentiment of gratitude for compliments and of gratification that at last English eyes are wide open with astonishment at our progress, which the Times sums up as follows: "A nation has never exhibited a more magnificent picture of material prosperity for ten years. Since 1870 more than eleven and a half millions have been added to the population at a rate of 30 per cent increase. Except China and Great Britain and Russia, no Government can count more subjects. In the number of citizens armed by similar impulse, and responsible services in it, the British Empire itself yields to the great Republic." Its declaration that the fifty millions Americans more than match the eighty-six millions of Russians and that the hundreds of millions of Chinese cannot be compared with them as a force among mankind is not particularly complimentary. We fall much rather the competition had been made with the fourth element in the scale which of the two forces, American or British, is most strongly influencing the world. This is not, however, the Times considers when it admits that there is no danger in the multiplying of the race, since America keeps equal pace in its productivity, and as fast as the European centres advances fresh means of support from the New World are made available. While the Times is astonished at the growth of the country and its grain-producing area, it is equally astonished at the growth of cities and towns, and says: "It is a peculiarity of North American development and evidence of its solidity that town and country grow together. As the branches and rootlets a healthy tree should stretch forth in serious, prosperous country life in a newly planted American territory is certain to have its cities in a thriving neighboring on her bosom." In this regard Europe affords no parallel." The only reservation which the Times makes is that the determination of Americans wherever they may be placed to have some of the luxuries of social convenience and comforts to the picturesqueness of American nationality, which may be as much by the speech that a prefacing nation, apparently a mixture which is seeking and clothing the world, is not likely to be as picturesque as it is practical and terribly in earnest, and has as much to do that it can only stop to enjoy a few of the luxuries. A nation of purely prehistoric antiquity is sadly and the universality of luxury is usually the forerunner of the ruins. This, however, is but a little sarcasm, and hardly worth consideration when compared with the generous tribute paid to American energy and enterprise by the Thunderer."

The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser and Mail draws to what lengths "cowardice" has prevailed in the South when it compares Ulysses S. Grant and Jefferson Davis, to the disadvantage of the former. It calls Davis "a hero," "a patriot," "a philanthropist," and "a gentleman," while it stigmatizes Grant as "the sorry servant of traitors," "the manful defender of the North," "the great gift taker and monstrous guarranch," and "the great National Hog." The Advertiser and Mail forgets many things. It forgets that Grant succeeded and that Davis failed, that the former did not seek to destroy a republican union, while the latter did, that Grant's services to his country were so great that the Nation had not money or honor enough with which to pay him, while Davis was an ungrateful traitor who was generously treated by being permitted to wear his head on his shoulders.

A furnace explosion was caused in a coal mine a few miles south of Salem, O., recently, by the stupidity and pigheadedness of a man named Smith, who, contrary to the orders of the mine superintendent, went into a mine room with a lighted lamp. The superintendent suspected that the room was full of choke damp. His suspicion was confirmed, for no sooner had Smith entered than the explosion took place. About twenty men were at work in mine. Six were instantly killed, and a number of others more dangerously wounded. Smith, the cause of the disaster, was lynched by a mob. The other victims were James Lemon and his son, James Mehan, William Haley, George Hendrickson. A shaft-house and train of eight cars were blown out of the main entrance by the force of the explosion as if from the mouth of a cannon.

Macon (Ga.) Telegraph (Dem.): Georgia has had but few clearer heads and more intelligent men than those possessed by the late venerable Judge R. W. Dabney. A good man was discerning and his views upon the excellence of his motives, in the leading of the Judge, cluding up with the statement that all they lacked to have the Christ and true equality in the South was incarnation of the right sort. The venerable Judge, seeing for a moment after this eloquent perception, turned with one of his genuine looks and exclaimed: "Oh, sir, you don't want people you want schoolhouses, churches and newspapers, and when you have these your country will be built up, for the right kind of people will come to you, as before." This was a new revelation to my friend, but there was force and truth in it.

The Legislative Appropriation bill was passed. The House non-concurred in all the Senate amendments to the Postal Appropriation bill, and a committee of conference was ordered. Police circles are convulsed over the neat and complete manner in which one of the smartness of Chicago, the term taken to be an odd pronoun. James B Sheedy keeps a private bank and conducts offices in the Union Building, corner of LaSalle and Washington streets. He has always had the reputation of being somewhat shrewd, and was the last person in the world who would be suspected of being soft enough to allow himself to be "played for a sucker." A days ago one Mr. Stowell, but says one to go to the Hot Springs of Arkansas, their father family shortly after their departure. He commenced his literary career in 1821 by contributing to the Edinburgh Encyclopedia some able articles of a theographical nature, which attracted considerable attention at the time. He continued his literary occupation for many years, and published a number of works, which, although not of a very high order of merit, were considered by the public at the time as very interesting. Since he has been engaged in the Presbyterian ministry he has written and published a number of sermons, which are not to be compared in point of literary merit with his earlier productions. He married in 1827 Miss Jane Porter, a sister of the well-known novelist, Miss Anna Maria Porter, who survives him. Mr. Stowell has been for many years a resident of Brooklyn, N. T. Depol Accident at Buffalo.

Sunday after noon which this morning the accident at the Erie York Central Depot in Buffalo, N. Y., by which Henry Walters, receiver of the Erie York Central Railroad, was killed, and a number of other persons injured, was the result of a removal of former officers which had formed a portion of the original structure, and which had been left standing when the new depot was erected. The work of removing the old portion of the building was in charge of Mr. Howard, the assistant superintendent of the Erie York Central Railroad, and was being carried on by a force of men under the direction of Mr. Howard. The work was progressing rapidly and safely, and no accident was anticipated, when suddenly the entire roof of the old structure, and with it the walls, fell with a terrific crash. The noise of the falling timbers was heard for many blocks away, and the dust arose in clouds. The men employed on the work were caught in the falling mass of timber, and many of them were buried beneath the ruins. The alarm was given, and the police and firemen were soon on the ground, and began the work of rescuing the unfortunate men who were buried beneath the ruins. Many of the men were found to be dead when the timbers were removed, and others were found to be severely injured. Those who were not killed outright were taken to the hospitals, where they died soon after reaching them. Those who were injured were also taken to the hospitals, where their injuries were attended to by the surgeons in charge. Those who were killed were: Henry Walters, receiver of the Erie York Central Railroad, who was killed by a falling timber striking him on the head; Thomas Hayes, a laborer —Yeamor is to become an American citizen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—William D. Bloxham is the only Governor of Florida born within the bounds of the State.

—General Garfield will be President James V., his predecessor Jamess Ian- ing late Madison, Monroe Polk and Buchanan.

—Altoona, Pa., has just lost a man so fat that the town was proud of him. He weighed four hundred pounds. He became so heavy that his legs refused their office and he died from the effects of a fall.

—An Englishwoman is exhibiting a model cooking stove in New York. It stands on long legs, is about eight inches thick, has no ovens, and only consumes a scuttle of coal a day. It can be placed in the middle of the room, so that its heat is diffused instead of being sent up the chimney, and there is no place upon it for frying.

—A man who had lived in a Boston lodging-house for ten years, and had been known only as "George," was found dead in his room the other morning. Among his effects were found papers which indicated that his name was Eben Leman, and sundry bonds and bank-books to the value of $15,000.

—A stock company was formed by seven boys of Helleville, Ind., for the purpose of sawing up railroad iron into cranks and selling it to junk men. They raised a capital of six dollars, with which they bought some tools, and began operations. One saw had not been prepared for market, however, before the shareholders were all arrested. The concern is insolvent.

—Mr. Shear Trigg, Superintendent of the Madison (Ind.) Poor Asylum, has a block of wood a piece of beech limb—in the heart of which is a likeness of a man, dressed in the style of the period, the skirts being flounced, tucked, gathered and pleated back, and the same being carried a la kangaroo. It is a freak of nature.

—It is reported that Florida has closed a contract for draining Lake Okeechobee, under which some is included a small lake and a very large swamp that between them occupy great space to no possible purpose. The ground to be thus reclaimed comprises more acres than Connecticut and Massachusetts combined, and is rich enough, it is said to produce all of the sugar the United States can use.

—There are now in the field between 10,000 and 12,000 men fighting on the colonial side in the South African war with the Basutos, of whom nearly half are European colonists and the remainder natives. The expense of this force is enormous. The direct war expenditures cannot be less than from £250,000 to £300,000 per month, and as nearly all these men are citizen soldiers, taken from their families and their business, the indirect loss must be nearly if not quite as great.

—The English Chancery Paymaster holds at this moment the enormous sum of seventy-seven millions sterling for chancery suitors, but is likely very shortly, by virtue of a new act, to receive the whole of the money paid into court in the Common Law Division. What sum in hard cash this gentleman will eventually represent it consequently becomes difficult to imagine, imagination equally failing to reckon the amount of misery and happiness found up in the huge money bags of which he holds the strings.

—The shiplast Portoffice in the world is in Magellan Straits, and has been established there for some years past. It consists of a small cask, which is anchored to the rock of the extreme cape in the straits, opposite Terra del Fuego. Each passing ship sends a boat to open the cask and to take letters out and place others into it. The Portoffice is self-acting therefore, it is under the protection of the natives of all nations, and up to the present there is not one case to report in which any abuse of the privilege is afforde had taken place.

—The new Senate of the United States will have a pretty strong representation of Bible names. There will be eleven Johns, seven Jamises, three Thomases and three Matthews, making twenty-four in all who bear names of the apostles. Two Josephs, three Benjamins and one Zebulon are representative of the sons of Jacob, and one Eli, three Samuels, one David and one Daniel, make up the list of thirty-six scriptural names. A Justin and an Ambrose, however, are there to prevent the early church from being forgotten.

—Considerable amusement was excited in musical and society circles at Pittsburgh recently, by the three morning papers appearing with extravagant announcements of the appearance of Annie Louise Cary, of Mapleson's company in "Il Trovatore," on the previous evening. The critics fairly gushed over her singing, and were horrified when they ascertained that, owing to a sudden attack of illness, Miss Cary had been unable to appear, and that her part had been filled by one of the chorus singers.

—The British Consul at Shanghai, Mr. Davenport, says there is little doubt that the dreadful famine which has for the last three years scourged the north of China may be attributed in great measure to the sprout of poppy cultivation; a very large proportion of the available ground in that region has been sown to this plant, which is found to be more remunerative than any kind of grain. Consequently, the granaries were left unfilled, and no provisions made for a year of drought. The Consul says that unless the growth of opium can be checked by the Government the evil will increase, and of course another year of drought will cause a more terrible famine than the last.

—A person in Milwaukee, Wis., having heard that General Garfield has been forced to refuse his autograph to the multitude who seek it, wrote to the Presidential-elect, professing to represent fifteen hundred Norwegians, and sent congratulating him and the country upon the result of the November contest. The trick was successful. General Garfield, with his own hand, wrote a becoming reply. It now appears that the fifteen hundred Norwegians existed only in the fertile imagination of the person who, after dinner one evening, concocted the scheme for making his name known to the public.

Instantaneous Photography.

What is known as the instantaneous process is a comparatively new, and I believe that the most remarkable result, in the way of taking horses under full trot, has been secured by the greatest perfection in 'California; but it has never been widely used in this country. Only one last night seems wonderful photographs of men and animals in motion, which makes a painter's study easy. The new plates are made of gelatine instead of collodion. The gelatine covering makes so sensitive a plate that new methods of opening and closing the aperture of the camera have had to be devised because the lead is too slow. A pneumatic ball-and-tube bulb is now used to throw up and bring down again a disc of black velvet placed over the lens of the camera. Attached to this bulb is a long tube, which allows the operator to stand about the room when the utter least expects it, to get a good picture in the fraction of a second. Taking children at the easiest thing in the world: It is not even necessary for them to keep still. Out of doors the photographer has taken horses trotting, ships under sail, with each wave showing as if the water had frozen at that particular second. Children at play make capital pictures; people talking, laughing, yawning; in a word this new process does away with the stiff, unnatural appearance which most people put on when in front of the camera. It is very expensive at present, but can be represented could almost talk. A sculptor whose turns cotta groups are known throughout the country, got some pictures of wrestlers from which he could work. The athletes came and went to wrestling without any regard to the presence of the photographer. Their instructions were simply to wrestle as if in a match. The sculptor held the rubber bulb in his hand, and when he liked the position that the men were in he squeezed the bulb and the picture was taken. At the end of the hour he had a dozen excellent pictures, which could be taken by no other process. It may be attributed in great measure to the sprout of poppy cultivation; a very large proportion of the available ground in that region has been sown to this plant, which is found to be more remunerative than any kind of grain. Consequently, the granaries were left unfilled, and no provisions made for a year of drought. THE AUTOCRAT.

His Royal Highness is out of town.
The tollgate are closed, and the shades are down.
And all things right in the house where he
Was wont to frolic with merry glee,
Lonely and drear as a deserted place
Is the home that misses his merry face;
For his royal highness is not at home
When His Royal Highness is absent from.

His royal highness never was contented
As if he fancied he owned the land,
And all his vassals his best friends,
As it delighted to do his will.
He was monarch of all he cast a way
With a royal swing and royal play;
With kingly favor on errands go
Were His Royal Highness not but so.

You'd hardly think that the way chap
Sitting up there in his mud hut's lap,
Was a royal prince in disguise,
Was a monarch in all but size;
Yet never a king on his throne could be
More determined to rule than he.
And it is very seldom he's sure to make
When His Royal Highness is take aback.

Some days he's merry, some days he's sad;
And some are troubled when he is mad.
Sometimes he's coaxing, and then by force to say
He'll have his own way.
They strive to humor his every mood,
And how the critters are satisfied
On tiptoe lightly his vassals creep,
For His Royal Highness I'm sorry to say

THE TWO GEORGES.

This story has no moral. Only fables need morals, and this is not a fable.

There were two of the Georges, commonly called George I. and George II.; not that they belonged in the House of Hapsburgh, or any other royal house, but to a very ordinary-looking family in Brick-kiln Row, separated by the latticest that always draws boys to places where they have a chance of breaking their necks. They stopped on the highest arch to look down at the river rushing along a few feet below. It was enough to make one's brain reel, and the two boys drew back with a shiver, had been flies born to hang upon the ceiling by their toe-nails. Down on the island was the pretty Club House, and two of the boat-Club were just coming out to practice. They were red shell-oars, and had no clothes to speak of, but it was wonderful to see how close in a shell they managed to fill little shells, balanced the long oars and shot away like arrows.

"I'm going to make me one of those boats this winter," said George II. George II. always was going to make anything he fancied, from a rat-trap to a high-pressure engine. They were best known to undertake a steam saw-mill with no better material than an old wooden pump, boards from the back fence, and a joint of rusty stove-pipe.

"Tell you what!" suddenly exclaimed George I., "let's have a stand and sell our things."

"Let's go peddling," suggested George II., "there's more'n five dollars' worth in those boxes."

After a brief discussion they turned back to Fourth street, and called for a cart. George I. immediately consulted with one driver, and George II. was on confidential terms with another, so neither of them chanced along they were forced to pay two cents for the ride on the platform, the driver winking at the shortage. As they came to the foot of a steep hill, a sleepy old fellow was hauling his cart of a barrel by the roadside, with one eye cocked critically towards them, suddenly grabbed a passing bite and trotted into line. The driver, without slackening speed, reached down his stick to fasten the dangling hook into place. The new comer helped to pull the car up the hill, when he was unhitched in the same fashion, and was left to walk leisurely back to his bay-barrel. This was an operation of whose fascination the boys were never weary, and they discussed it until they reached the end of the narrow-row, where they proposed to open business. The hooms proclaimed small success to peddlers, but George I took one side of the street, and George II. the other.

Front doors were slammed in their faces, back doors refused them, and back doors only showed a suspicious crack from which issued various discouraging remarks. But at last a woman who was busy at her sewing machine bought five cents' worth of suspender buttons through the half-opened window, and a good-natured Swede took her arms out of the wash-tub and exchanged a dime for a knife-sharpener and a bunch of lamp-wicks, the young merchant generously throwing in an almanac.

But immediately from this time trade declined, and the boys trudged pensively along past a row of saloons, until away in the distance, like a black speck on the yellow sky, they spied the flag above Fort Snelling.

"Let's go out to the fort," said two voices in one.

They struck into an Indian trot as cheerfully as if it were only a few rods instead of five miles to the spot where that curling ribbon was fluttering.

They talked incessantly, they examined every object by the way, from the parade ground, he determined, as he passed it, "stacking" them. So in due time they arrived at the sentry-box of the fort, and George I. confessed:

"We've got a pretty good thing," said George II., "we've got a pretty good business now," said George II.

"Ah," said their friend, with an inquisitive glance at the boxes.

"Peddling," explained George I.

"Oh, peddling, well, we're uncommonly fond of candy at the fort."

"Our line is notions," said George I.; "pins, you know, and knittings—such such things."

And the almanac, added George II., displaying his stock.

The soldier's eyes twinkled; then his shook his head.

"I'm afraid, my young friends, you have got yourselves into trouble. You are peddling on a Government road without a permit, and the sentry is liable to arrest and fine!"

Neither of the boys said anything. George II. reconsidered the face of their new friend, and concluded on the spot that he would be safe in going out on a "stacking" them. So he went on and on, and George I. followed his example.

"In fact," added the soldier, having in his turn reconsidered himself, "it becomes my official duty to arrest you for this breach of military regulations."

"What they charge," said George I., shving his apple-core at one of the sentries.

"The fine? Oh, that will probably be about twenty-five dollars."

"I s'pose we don't pay?"

"Then they will probably confiscate the goods, and the fort," and called them out."

"All right," said George I., feeling the coins in his pocket, and remembering he had got his money back, what ever happened.

George II. had made up his mind to abandon his box and jump off at the first sentry. He knew the ground, for every time away before the guns of the fort could be brought to bear upon him; but as they came nearer, and saw the great wall looming above them, they changed their plans, for a company of blue-coated fellows filling down to the railroad station, and, above all, hearing the bewitching sound of martial music from the parade ground, he determined to go in. And so they passed the inside of that enchanted castle. It was grand to ride across the ferry without paying, and climb slowly up the hill and around to the Commissary Department, where they were forgot their under arrest. Their new friend, postponing the trial, detailed a pompous little fellow to plant them about the fort, and they just went to the top and bottom of everything, their escort, who was only an officer's servant, forgetting his airs after a while.

By and by they came to one of the barracks where they met again their soldier friend. A number of other young fellows were with him, and they all on informed him that he ended the two young peddlers astonishing honors, and insisted their crime be forgiven as fearful that the Georges ought to have expected to be ordered off the premises immediately. Then their friend of the morning made a touching plea for the prisoners that really the boys were ready to cry with sympathy for their own misfortunes, and when the Commissary drawing down his black brows, decided that the fine should be one dollar each, and the goods to immediately sold at auction to meet it. George II. rolled over and picked up his goods in a thoughtful manner. The Court, however, took no notice of this unusual action on the part of one of the prisoners; but other soldiers came in, and the sale was proceed. The boxes for the Government sale as auctioneer.

"Here, Gentleman," said he, holding up a fork, "is a most useful weapon, imported at great cost from Nova Zembla, where the natives use it for harpooning elephants. It is also commended as a pocket toothpick and a weapon of defense against Indians. Only three in the stock, gentlemen—what am I offered?"

The forks were speedily disposed of at ten cents each; the almanacs went at like astonishing prices, and after a fierce struggle for the lamp-pins. The scenes were and for chorus; the sale announced that the line was paid and a surplus of one dollar on hand for the expenses of the court. This dollar the court generously donated to the prisoners, accompanying it by a grand speech in which they were advised not to be discouraged, but take a new start in life.

At that moment the to of a drum scattered the court, the Fort Commandant entered to the Commissary Department where he was wanted to rank supper, and the Georges, with their pockets full of wickets, walked slowly toward the gates, followed by the entire company. The main team was starting for its afternoon trip, and the driver called out:

"Here, you youngsters, pile in if you want to ride, and be quick about it."

The Georges accepted the invitation, and rode gloriously back to town.

"That was fine," said George I., "I didn't see a cent paid in but just mess nickels."

"Probably the rest gave their notes," suggested George II., with a wink.

The Commandant and servants drove Footles half wild with envy and admiration, but the united hands of the boys prevented any further upset any further attempts at peddling or trading; and that the Judge of Sunday Georges was limited to that one day.—Rusty Hunington Miller, in Wide-Awake.

They say in Washington that for centuries the hot dry wastes of Arabia and Persia have never blessed the sight of a cork; but the example of supervision does not appear to have penetrated beyond those wilds. Hayes himself has only practiced temperance at his own table. None of the fashionable ladies of Washington society except Mrs. Hayes entered the nineteen to the muddy surface of the Potomac for steady drink.

Boer is the Dutch word for farmer, answering to the German bauer. The Boers of South Africa are the descendants of Dutch colonists who settled at Cape of Good Hope more than 200 years ago. When the English swooped down upon the Cape Colony, Boers left their homes, struck out into the wilderness, established the Orange Free State and Transvaal Republic (republic beyond the Vaal river), the Battle Peace, the English observed it again seized and annexed them at the time of the Zulu war. Now they are fighting for their independence—which they deserve if men ever did. It is a pity that Mr. Gladstone, in deference to the traditional (but inhuman) British policy, considers it necessary to conquer these brave men before acknowledging their rights and doing them justice. From the way they have been fighting of late, it does not look as though would be many of them to enjoy Mr. Gladstone's clemency after the conquering is over.

The supreme court of Indiana has awarded damages to a railroad passenger who had bought a ticket entitling him to sleeping car accommodations from Indianapolis to New York, in a designated berth and car. At Pittsburg the car was detached, and his comfortable quarters were offered him, which he declined. The court held it no defense that the sleeping car company rented the cars to the railroad company for the use of passengers. The contract entitled the passenger to a continuous passage in the same car, or one equal in all respects. The supreme court of New York has awarded damages to a passenger who was ejected by the porter of a drawing room car for taking a seat therein, when no seat was to be had in the regular passenger cars attached to the same train. He had bought a ticket, but refused to pay extra for a seat in a drawing-room car, offering, however, to leave the car if a seat were furnished him in an ordinary car. The court held that the passenger was entitled to a seat on that train, and that no consent between the conveyor which caused the drawing-room car and the railroad company could relieve him the duty of the latter to furnish a passenger. It is gratifying to see that while so much legislation enacts which do not produce a new law in favor of the people, so much is being accomplished by the courts.

New York Letter.

New York, Feb. 28, 1881.

To the Editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel:

Our moral shortcomings have been severely lashed this morning. The Sunday for the Supper sans of View have enjoyed their annual treat of listening to a hearse from their well paid agent, Anthony Comstock, with his rejoicing statistics of so many thousand tons of objectionable literature destroyed, so many million circulating circulars hawked to the young and tender of both sexes, etc., etc., information which well-informed persons declare is largely substantiated with too much imagination. Anthony has to do something however, to earn his wages, and as to his successfully redressed to State Prison most of the actual mischievousness he must needs draw on his invention to supply a reason for its continued official existence. The Reverend Universalist Chancellor Dr. Howard Crosby here, has been fairly stirring up the Beecher and other municipal lights against the leaders of the excise law, etc. And the chief of a British kindred association is with us now, following Talmagic programmes of stirring the clergymen under the guidance of a detective. In fact, Satan should have a hard row to hoe in pious Gotham just now. The old boy seems to get along pretty comfortably, nevertheless.

Turning from moral to physical shortcomings on the reverse, I may mention the growing popularity of inspection for the newest sleep plumbers and plumbing. Dr. Janeway of the Board of Health has been spinning before enlived audiences, about the "peppermint test" first adopted in this country in print, in the form of a handy little pamphlet, by your humble and similar matters. A new and possibly quick learning profession is starting itself. For instance the excellent of the Sanitary Engineer, Charles F. Wingate, has disconnected himself from the not over liberally endowed position he held in that establishment, and has started as an expert adviser in domestic physics. He is one of the new combinations of practical architect, chemist, physician, and philosophical, styled Sanitary Engineer. He is a brother of the famous salesman, Geo. Wingate, and bids fair, from his full experience and ripe judgment, to be as prominent in the lead of the reform of plumbing as his brother was in the establishment of Greeleyism, the pioneer salesman of this country. The metropolitan Museum of Art has inaugurated a new department devoted to Hygienic matters, and Wingate has been appointed one of the lecturers, a thoroughly deserved recognition of his value.

Gen. Grant is wearing golden opinions by his industry, tact, and fundamentals in many directions. He seems to be a far fairer man than when President or Commander-in-Chief, and is becoming appreciated widely as a pleasant, well-informed, frank, and quite outspoken sort of person. In fact, he is quite changed from the character he was supposed to be, except in one respect. He still smokes. At the End of the Great Fair Commissioner he is working like a beaver and putting a finish of the ginger into his somewhat lagging compendium, after the fashion wherewith he was want to inspire his Tennessee in old Virginia campaigns. At the Fair of the Brooklyn Fourteenth "Red Legged Invicta," his old body guard, by the way, he was the cynosure of all eyes, and the fact of the presence of the hero of Appomattox was worth a great many dollars to the widows' and orphans' fund of the veterans. His luminous as a presiding officer at great gatherings where prominent men expound their views is quite lively, and altogether the greatest American transfer manages to distinguish himself right royally.

The great Fernando Wood (is not his history written by the book of the New Gospel of Peace by Robert Grant White?) is no more. He was a representative New Yorker, one of the most extraordinary wire-pullers and putter-up of jobs that ever lived, an aristocratic-looking Democrat of the Democrats, whose life was closely linked with some of the most memorable events in the records of the city. He will have a tremendous funeral following, provided, of course, that his family will submit to any public demonstration. A man of iron will, with the personalities of a woman, he won his way up from a low social on life's ladder. Few have been so bitterly hated by some men, a life so heavily faced by many others.

Our latest brave fireman is Lake Kavanagh, whose name has been selected to be inscribed on the "Roll of Merit" for a most risky but successful life-saving feat. At the recent burning of the supply fire store for the Western Union and other important customers for electric goods, after everybody had been supposed to have been removed to a place of safety, a very sickly Dutchman, weighing fifty 250 pounds, was observed in an apparently helpless and hazardous position in the sixth story of the burning block. Kavanagh, who is necessarily somewhat of an athlete, though his appearance, modest and mild, would not lead any one to suppose so, made his way to the couple and heroic rescue, each bearing himself unassisted to safe in his no serious burden. We Gentiles the appeal of our firemen, who have our sincere admiration, in juxtaposition to nothing the tag-rag of the Lower Fifth and Seventh Wards are hooting at, dancing at the occasion. In the very worst Western "scrapes" here loom to get on with a pair of a genuine hole and a Colt's knife, through which their once suits down to their work greasy and oily looking enough. Our men claim to be able to beat any rivals, come whence they may.

Himself never to omit mentioning his greatest of all Anti-Spring Festivals, St. Valentine's day. Never was the Saint so generally honored. Sandwiched as the parlor sandwiched for the canopy between cardens, how'd were the delegations of the clients who said to visit their eminence, the like unto the armored race of Niagara in silence, but betokens of such dimensions which these embraced because. Small boys sang everybody's for hells personal to Dear Val and sixteen was rounded the town in gear with magenta of more or less offensive. The cost of such appearances was large and nearly every of the riders came to grief very handsome and not a few found to be poor form to long time, in the street, being emphatically dogs of beauty. Pussy's Christmas cards have been closely approached by one unique series which took my fancy immediately, and I thereby recommend the Art Amateur or some other enterprising journal, with its good taste and liberal patronage, your compositors and the watercolors of the fowls of Gopel and Hyson. One particular specimen, a richly colored chicken, representing a basket of chicks, with a chanticleer perched on the handle, and a hen sitting on the edge, caught my fancy at once. I was accosted by a young person whom I should consider a shrewd, wide-awake on the subject.

When one considers how philosophically small pox is conducted in many other countries, and thinks of hundreds of thousands of dollars of hard earned, with such a peculiar dread of it in this country. It is not a patch on Asiatic cholera, the plague or yellow fever, but the moment a case breaks out in a town a panic ensues, and whole cities gallop around with fifty times as much as he or her to assure themselves. Never mind if the sanitary is well, and thoroughly ready to shut the enemy out, and keep him out; the whole of the community are bitten with a fever for the moment that they've got to go, or they wouldn't, and influenced, their friends are worked to a state of excitement and nervousness, which renders them for the moment ill for the time being. Why this ridiculous fuss should prevail I can't conceive. The disease is bad enough, but another is worse. Now, what do you think of this case? A weekly newspaper of Philadelphia, of the name of Pack, was suddenly attacked by small-pox among its staff in Brooklyn. A friend suggested that it would have been advisable to get out the paper somehow, and the proposal was agreed to. Accordingly the printing was done in Philadelphia, and the paper was brought over by a messenger. Think, as a mere matter of common humanity, of the dread and danger to your compositors and the workmen of the Brooklyn establishment. Some of the readers (Christians) might bear the handling. It is but fragile stuff.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

Congress.

In the Senate on the 15th Mr. Hereford presented a petition of the Legislature of West Virginia favoring a law for the regulation of interstate railroads. The afternoon was devoted to consideration of the Funding bill. Mr. Bayard explained the substitute of the Senate Finance Committee, and advocated the measure as a financial necessity. He said the country had as a medium of exchange the United States notes and silver dollars. The former was the issue of the Government, the latter was issued by the banks on deposits of bullion. The banks exchange bonds of a higher rate for bonds of lower rate. The requirements of the Finance Committee providing for the issue of 3 per cent. bonds to the amount of $500,000,000, and limiting the aggregate of the national bank circulation to $350,000,000, would result in the withdrawal of $150,000,000 of bank circulation, leaving the aggregate of the circulation of the country as it was. Mr. Bayard explained the provisions of the bill, and argued that the withdrawal of the bank circulation would not produce financial disturbance. Mr. Morrill opposed the bill, and Mr. Call spoke in favor of it. Mr. Hoar presented the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Mahone-Riddleberger contested election case, and moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report. Mr. Mahone addressed the Senate in support of the motion, and Mr. Riddleberger followed in opposition. Mr. Hoar's motion was then agreed to, and the report was read. It recommends the adoption of a resolution declaring that Mahone is entitled to the seat. Mr. Hoar moved the adoption of the resolution, and Mr. Riddleberger addressed the Senate in opposition. Mr. Hoar replied, and the debate was continued by Messrs. Vance, Ingalls, Blair, Harris, Jones, of Florida, and Mahone. Mr. Hoar closed the debate, and the resolution was adopted by a party vote—yeas 33, nays 23. The Senate then took up the Funding bill, and Mr. Sherman addressed the Senate in opposition to the measure. He said the bill was a surrender of the financial policy of the Republican party, and a surrender to the Democratic party of the power to control the finances of the country. Mr. Call spoke in favor of the bill, and Mr. Ingalls followed in opposition. Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate in support of the bill, and Mr. Sherman replied. Mr. Morgan spoke in favor of the bill, and Mr. Hoar followed in opposition. Mr. Edmunds addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill, and Mr. Bayard replied. Mr. Hoar moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole and read by sections.

OCCURRENCES OF INTEREST.

A Year of Horrors.

In good old Mother Britain, instead of frightening timid people with the prophecy that the world would come to an end in 1881, had announced that there would be a terrestrial ordinary year, and that the natural elements would be in a state of normalcy, without any real devastation of property and omitting great human suffering over wide areas, and that no era of casualties would set in, consisting of severe loss of human life and that violence, murder and suicide would run riotously, and would be in such excess the truth. There were months and a half in the year, and of the destruction which has been caused during the past six weeks continues to anything like the same proportion for the rest of the year it will be set down in all future time as the year of horror. The shorter sense to have accumulated in ravages since the 1st of January, Pitiful disasters are continuously sweeping down from the Arctic regions via Manitoba, pulling up snow almost unprecedented, and burying many victims beneath its avalanches, while numerous others have been frozen to death, exposed to its pitiless blasts. Our Illinois cities have inundated and destroyed and have washed out several mining towns. The ice gorges have been with great violence in the river at Cincinnati, St. Louis, Philadelphia and other cities, involving millions of property and causing many lives to the millions. A large part of New Orleans is submerged for many days, and all the levees and crevasses in the rural districts without a parallel. Fires have been of the most disastrous proportions, and explosions of mines have spread with fearful fatality. Every division of destruction seems to have been visited, and there have also been numerous casualties by lightning, many persons having been killed, and severely maimed and injured. Thousands of domestic animals have lost their lives. By explosions and other accidents 28 persons in a town killed in one country, as reported by 1st gough, which only a small portion of the list of casualties. Not content with the loss of life by natural and accidental causes, cupidity has worked perfects in this country have taken their own lives, and in a few weeks' time, and three fathers over children whose names have been mentioned in the newspapers on all questions not relating to Ireland.

A few days ago seven American prisoners in jail at Puebla, Mexico, who were charged with having taken part in some affray, escaped, and a fight took place, in which three of the Americans were killed and two others mortally wounded. The other two, four Americans surrendered. Their friends in the United States complained to the Government that no trial had been had, and that the prisoners were inhumanly treated. The Mexican authorities say that the prisoners were killed in resisting arrest, and that the two wounded men will recover.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, MARCH 1, 1881.

WM. G. HAYD A. SMITH. EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Gov. Hayes' administration the credit of paying $300,000,000 of the national debt.

A census of the state prisons at Jackson shows a population of 771. Immigration on that healthy contingent seems.

It does not seem probable now that an extra session of Congress will be required, and the country will have a rest after March 4.

Attorney General Latrobe's name is mentioned in connection with the office of first assistant postmaster general at Washington.

Senator Morgan is still confined to his bed with fever at his home in Tuscumbia, and it is doubtful whether he will be able to resume his duties in the Senate for some months.

If the Lower French of Congress a few days ago did their duty under the Constitution, the bill was defeated, 111 to 117, and probably consigned to oblivion, where it belongs.

The Detroit (N. Y.) Free Press says Secretary of State Baldwin declares that there is no use, and no hope with, more than three lines shall have a border and be boxed in.

The Iowa Republican Convention held last week, renominated Judge Cole for Justice of the Supreme Court, and Governor Gear and Austin Blair for the University.

John Sullivan, a Saginaw huntsman, opened some bears on one tree the other day, and flew them with an ax. They all entered on the ground, and the water flowing in and freezing had closed up the entrance.

The Greenback State Convention at Lansing nominated John B. Shipman for Supreme Court Justice, and David Parsons and Charles J. Willett for Regents. An attempt was made to remove Moses W. Field from the State Central Committee, but it did not succeed.

It is said that in some parts of Kalamazoo and adjoining counties the heavy snow drifts along the fences have acted like Joliet and left the fields full of standing corn, which is now frozen over. Wheat fields treated in this way will be in good condition to plow up in the spring for corn or other crops.

The Republicans, it is reported, on a straight vote, will lack one of the necessary majority to organize the next House, in Congress. The Greenbacks are boasting that they will hang together, hold the balance of power and force the Democrats to join them, and thus control the organization. Think the act will swallow the gudgeon.

The protracted contest over the Pennsylvania Senatorship was settled lately by a compromise between the two factions, all the old candidates being dropped and a new one—John I. Mitchell—now representing the 16th Pa. Dist. in Congress—taken up. Mr. Mitchell was elected, receiving 159 votes, to 92 for Wallace, Democrat.

Montgomery Blair has written a letter in which he says of the Confederate General Robert E. Lee, "Lee told my father in the room in which I write this note, when my father at Lincoln's request, offered him the command of our army, that he was utterly opposed to secession—regarding it as severity—and [illegible] he would resign sooner than draw a sword against [illegible] rather than see the Union dismembered, and yet he took up arms on the ground he himself had pronounced disloyal and resigned because his relatives and friends were involved in it."

A correspondent of the Free Press writes from Grand Traverse that the lumber and timber business is flooding. "Everyone," he says, "that parties can bring logs to the Northern Michigan, get a contract to cut the woods, at two to five dollars per log, haul it down, load it on board vessels, take it through to the St. Lawrence, unload and raft it down the river, reload and ship to Liverpool, use it on the building and make it pay, while we, with all the material at our door, can't make it pay? The timber is gotten out of the whole length of the tree, tapering as it has grown. I was informed by Mr. Hollon, who has a large contract here getting out shin timber, that parties owning pine standing in timber in Canada, under a tract of land 81 miles long and 12 wide, were letting their own timber stand and were now lumbering in Michigan."

MARVIN' A WIDDER.

[From the Texas Siftings.]
Correspondence N Boston
(which he is the Most an Postmaster.)
February 3

I was a young man and slightly averse to work. Work never agreed with me. My principle employment was to lay under trees all day and commune with nature, unless there was a grocery conveyance, with some stranger in it, near whom I was liable to ask the house to take luncheon. I didn't care for myself on principles, but said I once let I could get a plain seven-up or cooker in the grocery I her muscleman and Double and double Keerds developed the amseries to the arm wonderful. little cards was alination much for me.

The time come, however, when it became necessary to do suthin for a livelihood. I was too young to go into politics, and the old man, my father, he got to that age when it was all that he could do to borrer for hisself. He was a gifted cuss at one time or strong on a windbag speech. He intimated to me that the sooner I skirted for myself the better he'd be pleased. Wot could I do? I had no profession that would enable me to live without labor, and labor I wooden do.

My father solved the problem. "Marvin a widder," said he—a widder with a farm, and make her do the work. You are real to commence a family. Yes."

I mustard and I said one other man sweet sentiments to the effect that I'd be obliged to him for his suggestion a good deal.

Hardly was the Widder Tompson, which was the owner we use to the big farms in this section, I'd got a good skore of good land, well improved and well cleared.

I said soap to this venerable female, and to me define found her not averse to a second husband. The widder was a hatchy young man, and not bad looker, neither. She had a mine fer two or three farms to owned. She was richer by some on the farm, and it was a star in the east with her and then they needed a man to look after and tend to make a longer—I'm short—for special use, and we was vounited in the holy bonds of matrimonial.

The day after the Rev. Nasby remarked that we had led a long rock, and it was time we got down our work.

"Pete," said she, "you want to take the oxen this morning and go and break them the long piece. It must be done to-morrer, and shood her bin done we was to have a erysipelas feast."

"Lemmee me, Mrs. Nasby," sez I, going out and lay in down under a sapletree, and my pure children was soon around a sot on my knee. This soots me better'n I didn't marry to break ground."

"I think," she sighed, "you'd better get to work. I don't want that should be found on the farm, my dear husband, that you was all that he could do to borrer for hisself. He was a gifted cuss at one time or strong on a windbag speech. He intimated to me that the sooner I skirted for myself the better he'd be pleased. Wot could I do? I had no profession that would enable me to live without labor, and labor I wooden do."

"You won't work, won't ye? well, I guess you will! You'll work on this farm, or ye won't eet. You won't work, won't ye?"

And then, ez of the thot incitid her to mashids, she two out was little hair I had left, and knocked the best bit ov skin off ov my face, and dragged me out to fire bil.

There is the plow, there is the oxen, and there is the ground. You sooperintend! I'll do dad-end out of the blanks. Git to work, you broot, or—

I saw she was in earnest, and I yoked them oxen meekly, and went to work in the hot sun, and slo-ot down under a shade tree and kept me all by without a mute's rest till nite.

Her sooperiority was asserted and established. Whenever I dared to murmur; she wood exhibit a lock or my hair which she kept by her, and that was snuff. I dared not question her authority.

Two miserable years I spent on that farm—two years av agonizin labor. When she died, I discovered that the place was mortgaged for all it was worth, and that the money she got for it she had bequeathed to a neeow ny hem, and I was turned out on a cold world, with nothin to my name but a ragged to git off the place the night before I left.

That was why I went into politix. After driftin some time, assistin on wat chance threw in my way, etc., I found that men ov my caliber are needed in politix, and that is a shorter life in than marryin widders; and I likewise me to my mind that of ever I shood marry another widder, it shood be one which didn't weigh more than ninety pounds; and that I shood eggsahibit the resarch above the ceremony was pronounced, and see that the farm didn't hev no mennidges about it. Agricultur is the only teacher.

Buti shel never do it. Age has simmed my wicket, and long experience in horrerin cushion me to live in sutkin like comfort. I shel be happy. And then so long ez ther is a Demeorsy sich men ez me are in demand, and just before election I am chasr to send to drink anyhow. I kin allus pick up sent to eat, and close are not difficult to come by in a kentin and confidin kentry. Possibly I hev did as well ez if I'd stuck the widder and her big mustash to my will.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY.

A Great Man Gone.

Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, died yesterday morning at his lodgings in Washington City, after a severe illness of some weeks' duration. His health, however, had been failing for a long time. The Senator was one of the class of American statesmen who attract great bodies of personal admirers, and for whom their admirers entertain that strong personal attachment which amounts almost to personal allegiance.

Senator Carpenter had many of the characteristics of Mr. Clay. He was an orator, gifted with an imposing presence and a handsome form. He was an able, a studious and an accomplished lawyer. He was more of a lawyer than a legislator in fact, he was a lawyer with statesmanship attached to his profession. The only political office he ever held was that of Senator from 1869 to 1875, and after an intermission of four years, from 1879 to the date of his death. In the Senate he took high rank because of his ability, his learning and his independence. For two years during his first term he served as President pro tempore of that body.

Politically, Mr. Carpenter was an active Democrat until after the Rebellion was practically, when he decided that the best way to support the United States was to give his influence to the Administration and to the party which was identified with the Union, and he consistently followed out that line of political conduct. Personally he was a warm friend of his friends, and he could be as implacable an enemy as he was friendly. He was a man of fascinating manners and attractive presence, he had great command of language, and all the graces of an orator. He was an experienced and thorough Constitutional lawyer; and these qualifications, so rarely found united in such an eminent degree in one person, are those which would have enabled him to attain an honorable and commanding position in the country.

The State of Wisconsin has lost one of her ablest sons, the Senate one of her brilliant orators, the legal profession one of its brightest intellects, and the country, sharing in those special losses, endures also the loss of a statesman and a patriot.—Chicago Tribune, February 25.

GLEANINGS.

—If the Democracy continues to sink out of sight at its present rate of speed, not even its ears will be visible next autumn.

—There are symptoms of disapproval of the Democratic climber in the Democratic newspapers. They have another forgotten nor forgiven the indictment against—and probably unfairly—Mr. Tilden.

—The efforts of Mr. Watterson and others to yank the Democratic party back again upon free trade principles is a failure from a financial standpoint. The party's head is too sore from its recent disaster to take it at all eager for fresh experiments.

—Before President Garfield takes his seat it would be a great relief to the country if Mr. Hewitt and the World newspaper would announce that, after the inauguration, they are willing to admit that he does know how to spell. That would limit the area of trouble from the sky of what promises to be the most successful Administration this country has known for many years.

—As was expected, the South Carolina new papers defend Senator Ransom's swagger in the Senate. The chief bulldozing organ goes so far as to say, "Ransom is not an orator, but a rattling talker." Rather know what he was about. Bulldozing suits for him a seat in the Senate, and his business was to speak in the way which would give them the fullest satisfaction.

—The Kansas City Times is still on a hopeful mood. It makes the following cute comments: "If General Garfield should die,' remarks an exchange, 'Chester A. Arthur will be President.' But there is another 'if' to some in this connection. If Mr. Arthur is an alien-born, of which there seems to be ample proof, then William E. English will be President, and this is the more cheerful view to take of the matter."

—That this disgraceful outbreak of the bulldozers in Florida is a fresh illustration of the silvered attitude of the South on the suffrage question. They started out with the declaration that a negro had a rights which a white man was bound to respect, and they have outraged the doctrine now so as to stun in the imbition all Republicans. That regard all negro justifiable whose aim is to keep Republicans out of office.

Jimmy's Experiumi.

DEAR MR. HAYES:—I'm in an awful situation, that's how I got into the fix I'm in now. He is one of the boys that writes stories and makes pictures for Young People, and I think you ought to know what kind of a boy he is. A little while ago he told a story about initiation screw loose, and how he used to make them, and what fun he had playing them on the new scholars. I thought it was a very nice story, and I got some thistle and made a whole lot of screw-hooks and last Saturday I thought I'd have some fun with them. I got a nice cake, and it's a nigger baker that's a dreadful ugly old chap, in his study that General Washington brought over with him in the Mayflower, and Mr. Travers says it is stiffer and uglier than any of the Pilgrim fathers. But father thinks everything of that chair and never lets anybody sit in it except the minister sometimes, and he doesn't sit in that Hollow used to, and it's age that makes it so ugly, but as that Hollow used to, and if his nose is filly why don't he learn how to spell it, that's what I'd like to know, and made what looked like a tremendous crack in the chair. Then I pasted the screw-hooks on the chair, and it looked exactly as if somebody had broken it and tried to mend it.

I couldn't help laughing all day when I thought how astonished father would be when he saw his chair all full of screws, and how he would laugh when he found out it was all a joke. As soon as he came home I asked him to come outside the study, and showed him the chair and said, "I father I can not tell a lie, I did it but I won't do it any more."

Father looked as if he had seen some dreadful ghosts, and I was awful frightened, so I darted up and said "It's all right father, it's only a joke, look here, they all come off," and I rubbed off the screw-hoo ks and the soapy wax my self-acting mother used to use him burst out laughing, just as Hollow's aunt used to burst, but Hollow laughing he said "My son, this trifling with sacred things must be stopped," with which remark he took off his coat and then——— But I haven't the heart to say what he did.

I think that the fellow ought to be punished for getting people into scrapes, but I'd like to have him come out behind our barn with me for a few minutes. That is, I would, only I never expect to take any interest in anything any more. My heart is broken and I never eat cheese eger than once in a hooker during the awful scenes.

I've got an elegant waspet seat with a gold wasp in it that will hatch out in the spring, and I'll change it for a bull terrier or a shot-gun or a double-barrel in a cage that rattles good with any boy that will meet me next.

Ever affectionately,

Dr. St. John Roosa, of New York City, sends the following letter to the London Spectator: "In your number of the 25th of December I find upon 'American Prosperity' you state that 'there is a real discontent, which we have never been able to trace fully, that America once interested in the most decided way to save Switzerland from an invasion. If you will allow me, I can assist you to trace out this bit of history. You probably refer to the intervention of our Minister, Mr. Theodore Sedgwick, in the matter of the dispute between Prussia and Switzerland in regard to Neufchatel. Mr. Fay did interfere most decidedly in this question, and his entreaties were personally to the Prussian King, the brother of the present Empress, probably stopped the German soldiers just as they were about to cross the frontier. Mr. Fay sought and obtained an interview with King Frederick Wilhlm, which was entertained by the presence of any kind of official. The long residence of our Minister at the Prussian Court had given him great opportunities of knowing the estimable private character of the monarch, and when he was charged with him he appealed to him simply as to a Christian man treated with great power, and that appeal was regarded. How far Mr. Fay was have been instructed by President Buchanan's Administration to undertake this mission I cannot say, but I do know that the kindly-hearted intervention was cordially approved of by our State Department."

He comes to the baby with the sleepy head;
But on at all but the deepest rest is dread,
And the eyes must be closed when he is right.
Must close! Must close! Must close up tight!
Come, little eyelids! close up tight!"

Concerning the Saving of Labor.

I think actual housekeepers, who keep house well, must often be amused at the substance of many of the articles which from year to year appear in the "household" column of newspapers, telling women how to do their work in order to get through with it quickly, have plenty of leisure and be always bright and intelligent; for they well know that in housekeeping, as in most other businesses, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and that for every day of neglect there is always a "day of reckoning." At all events, that has been my own experience. I find that, in order to keep affairs running smoothly and well, there is always a great deal of work to be done and always a great many steps to be taken.

In economizing labor, both for myself and those whose work I direct, I aim chiefly at two things—to make the various tasks of the day "dove-tail" into each other, and to save steps. The latter, I think, is of very great importance in the matter of health. Exercise is one of the most important forest-aids. Aside from the architectural convenience which a room affords of which a man's age, cut off this indispensable part of the year and exposed to the frost-bite. Pain lingoing lamps are also a black cauldron largely to "keeping things in order," at little cost of time or trouble. If one cannot in hang a bag so that the mouth be always open, in which put all rags of every description that are not fit to use as dish-cloths that drift to that part of the house. Have another bag, with duffers from for paper of every description. Allow never a rag or paper to be thrown out of your hand. Have a small basket for dust pans and dust-brushes. In a large house there should be one in each room, and each floor. They will wear for years, and in the end cost no more than those made to do for the entire house, besides saving all the steps. To come to closets—I find that shallow ones are a vast convenience. Those for shoes and rice-crows, should be arranged as hanging shoe-bags, with pockets, and a wire to go about with the mind charged will small matters, but there is an old saw about "a place for everything," etc., that is worth remembering. If there is a shelf or chair in the store-room which should be placed that no one will be obliged to move something else in order to get at it, it is a useless piece of furniture, and should be removed. Store rooms should always be well lighted, and have a window, if possible, in the room itself. Have a shelf put in the cellar way on which things may be placed temporarily when being carried down or brought up and left until required.

Want to arrange the kitchen have in the kitchen, so far as possible. If there is no place for these things make a place. A small cupboard may be hung against the wall, which will prove a great convenience. Instead of talking and whining with a little water in a light tin, and stir into the pine, which is a jolly, sun yellow ochre and whiting with a which must be free from grease. It quickly, and apply warm to the floor. while moist the free from grease. It quickly dries, when it must be rubbed off with a soft cloth. Oat-cake resembling before the store-room had become sufficiently dry, and it manifested by a very slight change in the color of the cloth or germ. Farmers should make a test by taking a few grains from different ears, laying them on some damp sand, covered with damp felt and placing them in a room that is constantly comfortably warm.

Cheap Floor Paint.—Sash gum over night in water, boil in a jolly, sun yellow ochre and whiting with a little water to a light tint, and stir into the pine. Apply warm to the floor, which must be Congress.

The credentials of General Harrison, Senator-elect from Indiana, were presented and filed in the Senate on the 15th. The House Pension bill was reported from committee and passed, with amendments. The report of the Conference Committee on the Army Appropriation bill was adopted. The Conference Report on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was taken up, and several unimportant amendments were disposed of. Mr. McMillan offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information relative to the establishment of the reservation of lands known as Dodge, and the sale of the timber thereon. The Senate then took up the Deficiency bill, and has since chiefly been engaged with the consideration of the items relating to the Judiciary, Marshals and Attorneys. Senator Kalloggs, Windom and Taylor spoke in the debate. The House, on the 16th, passed the bill to authorize the coinage of trade dollars, and for the issuance and redemption of silver certificates. The House was occupied on the 17th with the consideration of the Pension bill, which was finally passed. Several propositions were made by one or the other of the two political parties to increase the number of Treasury Assistant Examiners, but all were voted down. The Senate adjourned as a mark of respect to the memory of Senator Carpenter, who died on the 17th. The Senate on the 18th took up the Senate Civil Appropriation bill and spent the day in discussing it. The House on the same day took up the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter, and after a debate of considerable length, in which Messrs. Hiscock, Hewitt, Cox, Reed, Randall, Kelley, Frye, Hale and others participated, the bill was passed by a vote of 149 to 93. The Senate on the 19th passed the Civil Appropriation bill, and the House the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. The House joint resolution appropriating and transferring certain moneys for the relief of Isaac Reed, was passed. Mr. Ingalls, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the House bill to provide for the appointment of a surveyor-general of New Mexico, and asked for its immediate consideration. Log Cabin Gossip.

An interesting Sketch From Our Traveling Statesman, D. D. Barbour.

Editor Sentinel:

Having arrived in "the land of promise" and gotten fixed, and found a home to rest my care and hunch for a time, I will take you according to promise a short sketch of my trip from here.

When I started from the snowy regions of Northern Michigan, should look a sun-shiny day, to sitting in the shade of the basement the cabin, breathing the soft, balmy atmosphere, filled with the fragrance of the sweet scented Jasmine and wild Arabis.

But how did I get here and why did I come? Being troubled with the nasal catarrh and bronchitis every winter and spring, I concluded to try a change of climate, and see what effect that would have.

On my arrival at Petoskey, I was carried by an old host at the Dyckman House, who had a good warm room and breakfast before the train left in the morning. The train she was very comfortably warm all the way to Grand Rapids. Stopping at the Morton House, I found it well supplied with Odd Fellows attending Grand Lodge, among whom was Bro. J. Milo Eaton, of Charlevoix.

Finding I could not purchase a through ticket, I went to any point south from G. R. & I. R. R. Co., I accepted to Cincinnati, where I did not want to go, for the reason my uncle for Chicago to go to Chicago to purchase.

I took passage on one of the finest coaches on the road from Grand Rapids to Muskegon City, which is a beautiful road, nearly completed. Leaving Grand Rapids in daylight on the 20th of November, 1880, we arrived at Muskegon in the evening, and found the train for Chicago ready to start.

Leaving Muskegon City, we passed through a country of sand hills and timber, which I should not care to live in for the rest of my days, and the soil does not look very productive. Arriving at Grand Haven, we passed over the Grand River bridge, which is a fine structure, and the river is navigable for large vessels. Grand Haven is a beautiful city, and has a fine harbor, and is a place of considerable business. Leaving Grand Haven

THE INAUGURATION.

Dreary Weather in Washington on the Fourth, Followed by a Little Sunshine—The Circumstances in Senate Chamber—The Diplomatic Corps, the Supreme Court and Distinguished Visitors—Mr. Garfield Is Sworn in as President and Delivers the Customary Inaugural.

WASHINGTON, March 4.

A rainstorm now-shorn intermingled with a rain preceding much of the day, began with the beginning of the inauguration of President Garfield. The extreme portion of the procession was postponed, but the ceremonies at the Capitol and the gathering of the people would not be prevented by the weather. Thousands were expected to witness, but not grace the realm of the procession. An hour or two each General Garfield, accompanied by Mr. Hayes, left the Riggs House and walked to the White House in Mr. Pendleton's carriage, drawn by four horses. The journey was made so quickly that the people congregated on the avenue in front of the White House did not know until after the carriage had passed who the occupants were. Less than an hour ago, wards and more visible for two days, broke through the clouds, and shone brightly for a few minutes.

At 10:45 the troops comprising the first division were seen marching and wheeling the corner of Seventh and Pennsylvania avenue to march. As the subdivisions from Annapolis made their appearance, they were given a demonstration by the enamored Washingtonians. The appearance was exceedingly creditable.

The scene within the Senate Chamber was extremely brilliant. The galleries were densely packed, the ladies being largely in the reserved gallery in the front row of seats were Mrs. Garfield, Mrs. Hayes, Mrs. Blaine, Mrs. Garfield's children and mother. The Senators occupied seats on the left of the main thoroughfare, the right being reserved for the Diplomatic Corps, Generals, Admirals, members of the House, etc. Every available seat in the area, in front of the Diplomatic Corps, was occupied by Secretary Evarts and Sir Edward Thornton, Minister. At 11:30, the Supreme Court came in and were assigned seats in front of the Diplomatic Corps. They were received by the Senate standing. The Senators took their seats, and the ceremonies of swearing in the new Senators was then proceeded with, and all but Senator Kernan presented credentials and were sworn. Senator Kernan's appointment not having been received.

The New Cabinet.

From the Chicago Tribune

President Garfield sent to the Senate on Saturday the names of the persons he has chosen to form his Cabinet.

The Senate promptly confirmed the appointments without reference to a committee. As three Senators are included in the list, their resignation will be required before they can take the oath of office, but there is no reason why the new Administration should not be fully organized and ready for business Monday.

The Cabinet thus composed will afford general satisfaction. It meets all the requirements of locality, giving three representatives to the east, three to the west, and one to the south. It has a high average of ability, unquestioned integrity, and in its collective capacity a very unusual experience of public affairs and knowledge of the duties pertaining to the several offices.

The new Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, is, in a peculiar sense, a truly National character. He is an eastern man with a western temperament. In the discharge of his official duties he will consider first the interests of his own country, and afterwards the small social amenities which have heretofore played so important a part in our diplomacy. Joining to an unusually quick and vigilant mind an extensive knowledge of human nature, a courteous and dignified manner, and a strong will, he unites most happily the characteristics that the head of the Foreign Office should possess. He will, moreover, give President Garfield the benefit of his judgment and calm counsel whenever he may be called upon to advise what the general conduct of the Administration should be.

William Windom, the new Secretary of the Treasury, a Minnesotian since 1855, is an Ohio man by birth, and is now in his fifth year. He practiced law in his early manhood, but has served Minnesota twenty years in Congress, ten years in the Lower House and ten years in the Senate. In point of ability Mr. Windom ranks high as a sound and clear-headed thinker. The veteran Ben Perley Poore, who has studied public men in Washington half a century, once said that the Senator from Minnesota, in his judgment, ranked next after Edmunds, Blaine and Conkling as an orator and a statesman in the broadest sense of that term. His service has been principally on the Appropriations Committee, and, though his duties did not bring him into such intimate relations with the Treasury as those of the Finance Committee would have done, they had still a very direct bearing on fiscal and economic subjects. Mr. Windom's great set public work has been his transportation report, which still stands as a monument to his diligence and clear apprehension of a most intricate subject. We do not question that he will speedily master all the details of his new office, and administer it with other impartiality and soundness of judgment. He brings wholly neither to the Cabinet nor the current school of finance, though he voted for the coinage of silver, in the line of a new and

New York Letter.

NEW YORK, March 8, 1881.

Well! all the world and his wife have bled to Washington to burrah for the new President and speed the parting one. Still there are a few people yet left in New York, and dull as their doings may seem to be, as compared with the festivities at the National Capitol, your gladly will do his little possible to shed some light on them.

Among other peculiar products we have lit on a policeman who cares headaches. The average leg in municipal bliss has been suppressed to be perfectly able to give headaches by liberal exhibition of the locust on disorderly skulls, but Capt. Caffrey of the 1st Precinct is a daisy magnetic physician. He laid his massive paw on the bruised brow of a reporter the other day, and the grateful scribe records the speedy exorcism of the accursing fiend which tormented him for indulging in too much chicken salad the night before, and it seems the Wall street brokers, after a heavy night at the uptown knelaugs, which is fast driving the quiet families away from the Windsor Hotel, with the libations accompanying their buried burlap and selling of every conceivable kinds of security or insecurity, go to Capt. Caffrey regularly to be cured. It is a strange story, but it may be true.

As the country is daily manifesting signs of prosperity certain constituent members of it are beginning to guide a living to some deserving fellow citizen, and are organizing co-operative stores where everybody is to get everything at half price, get reading rooms and entertainments thrown in as inducements to chip in and divide anything short of 200 per cent. profit on the venture. If the treasurers don't skip with the funds, it is possible one may save a few cents on the week's groceries by traveling a few miles and taking two or three lines of cars to get to the general store. Meantime the great retailers will check tendency to co-operation by lowering their prices and offering further attractions, and between the upper and neither millstone the small traffickers will come to grief. I say in old-fashioned, but I think the laborer is worthy of his hire, and in the long run I think I get my money's worth with less trouble in the old way of doing business. These cooperative clothing and provision stores, under the fostering care of Dutchmen, and other feminine bigwigs, with whom it has been a recess hobby, have been boosted up to short lived morass in England lately, but continued means that her such schemes cannot be expected. They are unpartisipated, finical, fussy, and they'll fail.

Cremation is again getting a good deal talked about, and several officers at the Navy Yard have been queered as taking active part in a revival of the agitation for its general adoption. A young fireman apparently so thoroughly approved of their ideas that he declined to wait till nature should have prepared him as a fit subject, and proceeded to cremate himself alive. His uncle, a doctor, had some extensive greenhouses in Flushush, not far from the Kings County Insane Asylum, and the young fellow, who ought, one would think, to have been placed in this latter place, crawled into the furnaces which heated their houses, and shut himself in to be reduced to ashes, after leaving a written statement of his intentions. The pieces were buried, so that the unfortunate experimenter didn't get his own way, after all.

It is nearly six weeks since the terrible sleet storm broke down our Telegraph system, and to this day the telephone people have failed to get things straight. They promptly sent in their bills, however, for services which they could not possibly render, and in the majority of cases have simply been laughed at. They have been paid, however, by some, and remedies all guessed in that way as patiently fair. They have not resented the refusal to pay on the part of their linmen whom they didn't fulfill their contracts with, and quietly accepted the loss, but they'll probably make it up again by charging more in future, and so wedded to the use of the telephone does every one become who has once used it for any time that if the rival companies can only lay aside their differences and combine against their customers they could charge 25cent anything they liked, and get it. Meanwhile the public has got so disgusted with the unsightly and, as it has proved, unreliable pole system that much silent opposition to the removal of the lofty wires is manifested. Many business men have peremptorily refused to let the telegraph repairers get on their roofs to mend and affix wires, and in some cases where access has been unchangingly obtained to forbidden places from the summits of adjacent property, the wires have mysteriously been cut and thrown down. The end of all will be, no doubt, be the early adoption of the European plan of underground wires. I shall say nothing now about the constellation of the telegraph companies or the fight of the French cable people with them. These are matters which deserve, and get special mention, and your readers have undoubtedly been supplied with all the newspaper notices they are likely to crave for on the subject.

I met O'Donovan Rossa the other day. He look aginate looks as possible as a Methodist clergyman after a long course rule, as he treats his ideas at a vocation fire, while his beard is carefully trimmed, and his inner man is beautifully refreshed. He is probably quite as much pleased as usual, though he is nothing less miserable at their some either of his comrades, who are troubled just now, apparently, with as intimate deal of sympathy for the Dutch Boers, at the Cape of Good Hope, who have just been so successfully giving the English a reminder of Bunker Hill—very much on the same provocation.

Your Radix is not rabid with anglophobia by any means, but he does think the "land country, you know" has been acting rather shabbily of late, and been decorously licked, too, several times, in a way not very conducive to national self-glorification. The modest soldiers who took patient by Wellington and Sir Charles Napier, and the most impatient jaws of whose useless war-axe were a cake of soap and a bath brick have been replaced within the last twenty years by a Sybaritic troop of imitators of the Prince of Wales, who, with their patent portable portmanteaus of tools, wax chairs, canteens, etc., etc., not forgetting vast supplies of beer and brandy and soda are carrying on war in a manner self-indulgent sort of way which leads to disgrace. Your Radix knows exactly what he is talking about when he gravely states that the ordinary barrack furniture and equipment generally of the youngest officer in the British army of today, is more extravagant in actual cost than that of a marshal of France or a general in Russia or Germany. RADIX.

Important Newspaper Change.

The Detroit Post and Tribune has really been consolidated. The conflicting interests never came harmonized, not even by the nominal union consummated four or five years ago—seem at last to have been amicably arranged. The paper has passed into new hands, and is under the management of a new board of directors. At a meeting of the stockholders held in Detroit recently James F. Joy, Chrisman H. Buhl, James McMillan, Allen Sheldon, Gen. R. A. Alger, George Jerome and Hiram Walker were elected directors of the company. They are also proprietors of the establishment, each holding an equal or several interest. These gentlemen represent not less than ten million dollars. It is therefore backed by sufficient wealth to make it one of the most enterprising papers in the West, and we believe this is the intention of its new owners. Though it has always been one of the best papers in the state, it has labored under certain embarrassments and never was that it will be relieved from in the hands of the wealthy capitalists, and we wish it all possible success.

The Cincinnati Enquirer Boss speaks the sentiments of the new Secretary of State: "Let us now look at this Cabinet. The Secretary of State is a big thing. He is one of the ablest men in the country. He knows the power of non-resistance; the weakness of our country, and the secret of foreign influence toward us. We have no enemies among foreign nations. Many of them envy our career, our chances, and would like a block in somewhere, but we are too strong for them to try it. France is a Republic modeled on our own. Her Minister yesterday at Garfield's inauguration adopted the suit of clothes that our Ministers must wear—plain black, without a trace of gold or silver upon it. Blaine knows the American people. There is no great point of the mob about him. He is a good fellow, and would rest for the world have himself counted in any high position as a befriender of any special interest.

Speaking of Secretary Blaine's pecuniary means, the New York Tribune says: Mr. Blaine was not a poor man when he entered Congress in 1863, and he is not a millionaire now. For twenty years he has owned a valuable real trust of several hundred acres near Pittsburg. This yielded him a handsome income many years before he entered Congress, and the investment has been a profitable one during his public life. His business affairs have been managed with prudence and shrewdness, and he now has a handsome fortune. His home in Augusta, near the State-House, is a plain two story house. Several Congressmen in the state have received benefactions from him, and his charity and generosity are appreciated at home. In his own house he is a man of culture and refinement, a genial host, a courteous gentleman.

The inaugural address of President Garfield is generally commended by the press of the country of all shades of opinion as careful, statesmanlike, and dignified. His references to the Southern question and to the finances of the country are heartily commended by the Republican journals, and are taken as indicating that he will pursue no uncertain policy in regard to these questions.

SAYS an exchange: It cannot even be said of the expiring Democratic Congress that it meant well. Its intentions were all bad, its wisdom was foolishness, and its capacity small. The only thing it had enough of was ability to blunder.

A SITE to cost $65,000 has been secured on Georgetown heights for the new Naval Observatory. Plans for the building have also been chosen.

WILLIAM A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TERMS, $1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

We are permitted to publish the following extract from a letter written by Hon. John Nesbitt to his wife.

Saginaw, February 9, 1881.

* * * I am going to-morrow (to-day) to Midland City, and from there I would like a drive outside the limits of civilization, and very soon will write a letter, as I intend to know one, and really by the way from Charlevoix, and was the engineer on the Pere Marquette last season. He knew me better than I did him, and knew Geo. Bibby well, desiring me to send his remarks to him. He returned to Liverpool last Tuesday night, intending to sail on New York the following day. I had a letter a few days ago from Mr. Hall, the steamer Dutch Lion very much, and will if possible send them to-day.

Yesterday I received a letter from Mr. Goodhue, of the Isle of Wight. He is very anxious to get his invitation for me to call there, and I may do so. I have promised to call on Mr. John Burr, and may possibly come Tuesday for that purpose. Lower will, although more likely not until Monday or Tuesday.

Tom Rogers of Penn. was for a most excellent day or two at Exeter, also Flowers, and I think some to have had Lucy Rhodehedge.

I have not yet seen a full London fog, although we have had several approaches to it. Instead of some the single is most of the house stands in like a great cloud, the sun scarcely visible, and there is hardly light enough for one to wash.

* * * I have many times wished you were here with me, so that we could look over the great place together. To-morrow (to-day) for me now to try to give you a description of what I see every day, but perhaps shall be able to give a little idea when I get home. I went to the cattlemarket, which is arranged in the most convenient manner, as well as efficient and substantial. There was not much stock, however, for such a market, on account of the fear of a contagious disease among cattle; but many of those I saw would be great cattle with us in America.

In the afternoon I went to the Tower and looked over the splendid gold plate and jewelry which are kept there. I also saw a great deal of old steel armor for both men and horses. There is, too, every kind of weapon that has ever been used by civilized or uncivilized mankind. Among the rest, a few old battle-axes; also two or three stone axes. These, however, were not as good as the one I brought, and I left the person in attendance so. The result was that I signed my name and put down my own age in December, and as I have not yet given that one away, I must present it to the authorities for exhibition in the Tower. So you see, if all goes well, that will be in the fourteenth most honored resting place. I could not see as much of the Tower as I wished, a part of it being closed to visitors.

Yours Affectionately,
JOHN NESBITT.

The History of the Democratic Party.

Prolixity is a serious fault in a writer of history. It is not a fault which can be charged to Mr. Samuel J. Randall. That distinguished writer and manufacturer of statistics has succeeded in condensing the history of his party during the last six years into the final output of two comparatively short chapters, which are here presented without any abbreviation.

Chapter I. [Omitted.]

Chapter II. With the close of this session it is safe to be considered complete.

These two brief chapters tell the whole story. Though in the initiative act, it looks like the beginning and the ending of a historical narrative from which the middle part has been omitted, such is not the fact. There was no middle part. The historian could not find any materials for a middle part. His task was to write a faithful history of the political performances of his party during the period between 1874 and 1881. He found its whole history during that period to be comprised in two notable events—first, its entrance, second, its exit. The conscientious historian could not give any account of what the party did between those events, as there were no facts going to show that it did anything. History tells us that Napoleon the Third, after his overthrow, said that he had devoted much study to the history of Napoleon the First, and that he had learned from it one lesson—how not to do things. How can any student who knows Mr. S. J. Randall have any doubt that he has a profound respect for that wonderful man?

That portion of Mr. Randall's great historical work which follows his second and concluding chapter is in the nature of an apologia. It is designed for the consumption of the audience of facts by resorting to the always convenient argument of the old-fashioned bombasts and schoolmen. When the party's exit, in 1881, "it had to face a financial crisis," or "commercial revulsion," which emerged in 1873, continued during 1874, the statement seems warranted. It would have been a further warranted inference that the business revulsion in 1873 and the entrance of Mr. Randall's party in 1874 had to each other the relation of cause and effect. If the revulsion had not come in 1873, the remarkable statesmen of Mr. Randall's party trade-mart would not have been able to form that vicarious alliance with the flat-money farmer which enabled them to get control of the House in 1874.

The found "idle unemployed, trade depressed, financial distress widespread, glass everywhere." They proceeded to give labor employment, to alleviate the commercial distress, dismal the gloom, make business lively. And they did it. "Money was extravagant, extravagant economy," and "restored confidence" followed. The party that did all this by the marvelous potency of a silver ass.

It is scarcely well remembered that they proposed to do it by repealing the limitations to the postponement, and the future to a solid-money basis, and flooding the land home-body with irredeemable flat. But extravagance was the plan of "losing the financial crisis" and putting a stop to the depression. That the consequence of exercising that plan would have been universal bankruptcy and ruin, public and private, sane people do not doubt. But they did not fulfill their part. All their efforts to repeal the Resumption act and "restore the Legal-tender money" were defeated. There were obstacles which they could not surmount. Therefore, by failing to fulfill their programme of commercial and industrial ruin which was to precede their commercial and industrial upbuilding, they did it by the simple but effectively method of "losing the financial crisis," as described by John P. Stubbs in his great fight with Judge Anne. To the disinterested spectator the victory appeared to be on the side of the Judge, who had got the unexpected result by the language of the framer, was "chawing him up." It looked differently from Mr. Stubbs's point of observation. "We held the Judge down with our nose," says that versicular narrative, "which was but conveniently inserted between his teeth for that purpose." It was in much the same way that Mr. Randall's party stopped extravagance, established economy, and restored confidence.

"It found gold at a premium and the notes of the Government at a discount." It endeavored to keep gold at a premium, to banish it as a standard money, and to reduce the notes of the Government to a still greater discount by indefinitely postponing resumption and indefinitely continuing the "lawful money" fraud. It failed utterly in that virtuous scheme. There are "no idle hands" to leave the public credit better than it found it, and unemployed in the money-markets of the world."

It had witnessed the removal of sectional distrust within our borders." By-times words it does not appear that the conscientious Mr Randall intended to assert that his puissant party has removed sectional distrust. It only did it has witnessed its removal by the effect of events which it was unable to do direct or control. Why has Mr. Randall thus attempted to deprive his party of an important part of its hard-earned glory? It is no less plain that the removal of sectional distrust is one of its grand achievements, since 1874, then it is that the restoration of business confidence, the resumption of specie payment, and the improved public credit are among its glorious works. Had Mr. Tilden been made President in 1876, thus giving the Southern sectional party control of the Executive power, it is a presumption of reason that sectional distrust and animosity would not have been removed, but intensified and prolonged. Foreseeing this very natural consequence, Mr. Randall's party, in Congress, having the power to make Mr. Tilden President, omitted to do so, and, instead, made Mr. Hayes President. The latter began and steadfastly pursued a policy which has had a prodigious effect in hastening the disappearance of sectional distrust. Therefore, by making Mr. Hayes President, Mr. Randall's party has been, not simply a witness, but a cause, of the removal of sectional distrust! It is wrong for Mr. Randall to try to clear his party of any part of its glorious achievements.

But "the crowning triumph" of that party, Mr. Randall's logical mind perceives, has been "the effort" to enact the Funding bill. It seems at first a little difficult to understand how a legislative "effort" which met with defeat can be a "crowning triumph." But a little Randallian ratiocination renders it perfectly plain. The party attempted to enact a funding bill which, had the attempt succeeded, would have raised the very mischief in business and fiscal affairs. But the party attempted and failed. The failure averted the mischief which the attempt threatened. Therefore was the extinct animal of the drowning triumph of the party which failed!

The epilogue to Mr. Randall's history of his party during the last six years has a peculiar value. It serves to make many things clear which hitherto have been obscure. It enables us to see distinctly the ground for the so-long-asserted claim that that political incarnation of Isonthusism lin iaven the "party of the Constitution," the "party of progress," etc. When, twenty years ago, its controlling element fought and fell against the Constitution, it was thought that the name "party of the Constitution" was inapt—that, strange as it was! Had the party succeeded in that effort, the Constitution would have been smashed. It did not succeed. Did not its failure save the Constitution, and is not its subsequent establishment in the title of Constitution-saver? Again, when only two years ago, its agents in Congress set out to undo the political consequences of its failure to overthrow the Constitution, it was thought that its course imparted a perfect of that wonderful party of progress. The effect of its success would have been to make the Constitution back to the time of Buchanan. But it did not succeed, and the consequence of its failure has been the restoration of its control in Congress and the advancement of the Constitution to the title of Constitution-saver? ☞ It is fortunate for the country that the Democratic party's power for mischief is a good deal less than its desire to commit the same.

☞ Let us hope that the new House of Representatives will have a Speaker strong enough to manage its affairs and keep the peace. Ex-Governor Seymour says in his letter to Presidential candidate the party must take a "man who by his character and history will command and draw votes from the Republican party and poll the Democratic vote." In the language of the ensanned Benny Pope, "there ain't no such beast."

☞ A New York clergyman, in a lecture on "Modern Courtship," told his audience that "young ladies and gentlemen should be entirely frank in their courtship—they should describe to each other their weak points." Many of the young people of his audience concluded to take his advice, and the result is that twenty-two engagements have been broken off between the young men and women of his congregation.

The Boers and British.

The severe disaster to the British army in South Africa is quite an incident of interest to the rest of the world as it is to the parties. Maps and encyclopedias furnish a means of location exactly the scene of conflict, but it probably was among the easiest accomplishments quite to attack the Boers from and not far from the boundary of Natal. A glance at any of the larger maps shows that branches of the Limpopo river originate in about 25° degrees north latitude, within about 100 miles of the coast of Africa, and about the same westward to a junction with the streams for Orange river, which points on the Atlantic from the west coast of Africa, about 100 miles north of the Cape of Good Hope. Transvaal (meaning the country across the Vaal) lies north of the Vaal river and south of the Limpopo (or Crocodile) river, and north of the Zulu country. Its eastern boundary is not more than 40 miles from the east coast of Africa. Transvaal grew from the Dutch settlements planted in South Africa in the beginning of the 17th century. The Boers, as these settlers were called, were dissatisfied with the transfer of the lower country to the British in 1814, and turned their eyes to the regions lying at the north, beyond the Orange river. NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

U. S. Senate Proceedings.

The Senate was in session for only a short time on the 9th, and adjourned after the reading of the journal Senator-elect Mahone, of Virginia was sworn in, subscribed to the oath and took his seat. He will be the fifth Republican vote.

Credentials were presented to the Senate on the 9th from Messrs. Kirkwood and Wallace, announcing that they had forwarded to the Governors of their respective States their resignations as members of the Senate. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted: Resolved, That Hon. Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio; Hon. Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia; Hon. Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois; Hon. Samuel J. Kirkwood, of Iowa, and Hon. David Davis, of Illinois, have been members of the United States Senate for a period of more than twenty years, during which time they have discharged the duties of the high office with honor to themselves and to the country; and that the Senate has heard with profound regret of the intention of each of these distinguished Senators to withdraw from the public service. Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to communicate to each of the Senators named in the foregoing resolutions a copy thereof, and to present to each of them a copy of the proceedings of the Senate upon the occasion of his retirement from the Senate. The Senate then adjourned.

In the Senate on the 10th Mr. Hoar presented a petition of the Legislature of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a law to prevent the importation of adulterated articles of food. Referred. Mr. Hoar also Lumbermen's limits run here to Sunset in 1879, 1880's rank. Now it is Harbour and Hudson in the latter, so the last 100 years is accounted for, by which the Georgia lumbering prophets are shamed as had the almanacs.

The Indianapolis Journal prints a special on Governor Hendricks having closed the house and his wife at the close of the legislative session. If it is ever thus hereafter, some time, the country will probably wonder the cause of the sudden removal.

It is said that the late Mrs. Carpenter, of Detroit, some of Postmaster Pratt's people, is going to end, and that in addition to the bulk of her private property and pictures, the fine library, one of the most extensive in the country, is worth $50,000, and a variety of miscellaneous wealth $100,000 more.

The New Haven Star Clipper of March 5th says of the Democratic Senate: "The Democratic majority in the Senate is not overwhelming, but it is large enough to control the action of the body, and it is unfortunately true that the Democratic majority in the Senate is not composed entirely of 'true,' be-ruled men and women."

The P. O. department at Washington recently issued an order requiring the removal of postmasters, postal clerks, and all other persons employed in the service of the department, who are found to be addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The office of the — is certainly one of value — [illegible]

Hon. Ransom H. Pinney, of Lansing, Mich., formerly resided on the North side of the Kalamazoo River in the village of Bronson, and was a prominent Democrat. He was elected to the Legislature from Branch county, and was the author of the Republican call for the organization of the Republican party in this State. He was also the author of the Republican platform of 1854, which was the first platform ever adopted by the party. Mr. Pinney is now a resident of Lansing, and is a member of the Legislature from Ingham county.

It costs to the Government one Indian pension to a pretty even — the youngest pensioned by a Dakota officer — four. Great consolation that Mr. Lincoln is older than he (Custer) was when he took charge of the Army of the Potomac. And he might have added that the new Secretary of War is older than Jefferson was when he wrote the Declaration of Independence, and as much older than Madison was when he was a member of the United States Supreme Court.

At the coming spring election an amendment will be submitted to the people giving to the judges of the supervisors power to appoint their own clerk. This power was once in the exclusive gift of Gladwin county. This amendment was submitted three years ago, but, not being fully understood by the people, was voted down by about 1000 majority. The amendment should be adopted. It does not create a new office, and does not add one dollar to expenses. There is no reason why the Hudson county clerk should not be the supervisors' clerk of the same county of Michigan.

The money order department of the New York postoffice handled $31,000,000 a month last year. The orders averaged $20. The business is only a few months old, and is a marvelous institution. The number of orders issued for the entire United States during the fiscal year was 2,709,326, which the money averaged 16 cents. Of the total paid to the postmaster-general reached $216,462.50. This only some fourteen was transmitted through the mails. It is proposed to reduce the fees from ten cents to five cents on amounts not exceeding $5, and on orders over $5 and not exceeding $10 a reduction from ten cents to eight cents, and on amounts of ten cents may be sent in any one sum from $50 to $100.

Ingersoll, Indiana, is a town of 1,000 inhabitants, but occasion to make a speech, in the course of which he repeatedly accompanied to mention Gen. Ramsey, the new Secretary from Virginia, in regard to his duties, that Marmion mentioned the wardrobe of the party took over his head, and in a repeated speech in reply to Hill, he recently denominated Porter as Democracy, and stated emphatically that he should cast his vote at the pleasure, regardless of the wishes of Jim Hill & Co. In his vote they say not the day following, he voted with the Republicans, and this time with the officers of the Democratic convention. In this connection it is very probable that as soon as the new Senator from Maine shall arrive at Washington he will publicly declare that he endorses the present administration Republican party, in order to counteract the influence of Senator Blaine, who has left Maine to control the party organization there. Mr. Frye is a Democrat, and will be the Democratic caucus nominee for President of the Senate, but as he will vote with the Republicans every time, he will be elected.

Hon. Henry B. Brown, of Detroit, has been appointed by President Garfield as having closed the United States circuit court for the district of Michigan, vice Judge Longyear, resigned. If it is not then confirmed during the present session, it will probably be by the next Senate. The appointment should be accepted. It does not create a new office, and does not add one dollar to expenses. There is no reason why the Hudson county clerk should not be the supervisors' clerk of the same county of Michigan.

POLITICAL BREVITIES.

☞ The Democrats don't like the President and don't like his Cabinet. This is doubly sad.

☞ Thurman, Hendricks, Wallace, Tilden and English have started on a go-as-you-please race for oblivion, with a first-class chance of all of them getting in first.

☞ Mr. Tilden has gone into General Hancock's service, and presides stormy weather for the new President. As Samuel has fallen horseshoe as a badge of the signs of the times, it may be as well to distrust somewhat the prediction in this instance.

☞ In Mr. Tilden's letter accepting the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1876 he expressed his determination not to use the office for his own comfort. It must be a great satisfaction for him to know that he has been able to carry out his policy in that respect.

☞ A few vigorous remarks from Mr. Watterson, favored with some free observations on the disinherited proclivities of the Democratic party, might enliven things somewhat. The despair of the Democracy now is a gradually increasing fear that it will never awaken into the sleep that knows no waking.

☞ Democratic consistency is a gown of special brilliancy. The Democratic General Garfield's name to a letter to prove he was the friend of corporations and monopolies, and now they publish one from his Secretary of the Treasury opposing monopolies and corporations, and avowed that "it is only a free expression of the views of the people that discusses which are entertained by the President himself."

☞ The child-like belief of the Democrats that they can hunting the Nation further on the movement they have just made, however, in humbugging themselves. During the last twenty years they have methodized that as fast as Love Feast Day does they wanted to go before the people on, but when the people give in their verdict it has always been a peremptory command to "get behind me."

☞ If the South is a curse in its professions of agreement with President Garfield's course, it will cease to offer further obeisance to a live and fair invangelists of conservatism at the next elections. That will be a sure test. If men like Chalmers are given to understand that if they steal seats the votes must not loque to be sustained in the next legal public scrutiny, they will not steal. The South has the remedy in its own hands. Southern words have always been fair enough; what is necessary is some fair deeds to show that the words are genuine.

☞ Mr Tilden is credited with the production that General Garfield's Presidential term of office is the darkest record. Who will supply the thunder and lightning and other accompaniments, he does not tell us. Possibly the Sage of Cyder Alley will furnish them himself. The next presidential election of a storm from any other quarter. Everybody who thinks he sees a cloud no larger than a man's hand, and that barely outlet and prosperous epoch of four years ahead for the country, and it may be that Mr. Tilden has private information to back up his solitary view. The term of Mr. Hayes was in many ways a stormy one, but when the damage was summed up at the close it was found to have been principally to the Democratic party.—N. Y. Tribune

The Struggle Against Bourbonism.

That was an historic scene in the Senate when the Southern Bourbons, under the leadership of Ben Hill, of Georgia, sought to align the independent Hillites, of Georgia, with the rank of the Dems Confederate party. It had a significance far beyond the sensational display of a forensic tournament. It was the first open declaration of the Bourbon leaders that they would not be satisfied with the control of the Democratic party in the South, but that they would use their influence to overthrow the Democratic party in the North, and to that end they would make the Democratic party in the South which is disposed to relinquish the overbearing domination of the Bourbon leaders and assert the right of individual opinion. It was a struggle of giants. The elements back of the men and the principles involved were important to the issue of this struggle. The victory was with Mahone. The alliance of Republican and Readjuster party was in the direct line of Republican progress. The Rebellion was conquered by the sword. The reconstruction of Nationalism must be encouraged by supporting men who have the results against Bourbonism, sectionalism, Individualism, extravagance and oligarchy in Southern politics.

Hill occupied the vantage-ground in the opening of the struggle. He professed upon a well-established and familiar path. His had enjoyed abundant experience in elevating party, section and State above patriotism and the Nation. He had engaged often in aggressive assaults upon those who dared to question the supremacy of Bourbon despotism, and he was surrounded and backed by men who had been accustomed to the triumph of the bulldozer. Up to the very last he was apparently unwilling to believe that the Bourbon power was at fault when applied to a man representing a Southern constituency. Hence the coolness and coolnisence. But before the struggle had ended, Ben Hill was exposed in a light which was disgraceful to him both politically and personally. While assaulting a fellow Senator by indirection and insinuation for his alleged treachery to his constituency, Hill himself was in the attitude of a man who had not only been a traitor to his country, but had dragged an unwilling constituency into treason by misrepresenting it, and barraying a trust which had been confided to him. The only treason which loudness to me like Hill is a resurrection of sectionalism and a protest against Bourbonism. A man may take up arms against his Government, and even prove recreant to his friends and neighbors for that purpose, and still be as pure as an angel, according to the sob sel of ethics to which Hill belongs; but let that leal a revolt against class-rule and feudal methods in behalf of free thought, individual rights, and National sentiment, and that man becomes in his eyes as perfidious as hell. Every covert insult and every goaded epithet which he directed against Mahone was turned back upon him with a keener edge and redoubled force. Nor was Hill able to withdraw from the contest which he imposed upon Mahone without demonstrating that the latter was the stancher Southron according to the chivalric gauge, as he was the readier to resent personality, nay affront put upon him and to make good by trial of battle any issue between the two.

Mahone occupied a trying position in the struggle which Ben Hill forced. He was new to the Senate. He could not help feeling the restraint which the atmosphere of the Senate Chamber imposes upon a young member. He was prepared to follow his convictions, but naturally inclined to postpone the contest which the assertion of such convictions was certain sure to bring on sooner or later. When he could no longer with self-respect remain silent under the taunts and goading of the Georgia Senator, his hot Irish blood rushed to his head, and to that extent placed him at a disadvantage with his cooler adversary. But the inside spirit manifested, frankness and a sense of right and personal courage for his lack of skill in debate and practice in suits. Hill had forced him to be a fighter, and the struggle left no doubt that without any man in the Senate from the north would be found to become as uncompromising foe of Bourbon intimidation and skill did not succeed Mahone in the struggle. Hill's coolness, deliberation and skill did not succeed in gaining more than a truce between Mahone and the Bourbons appeared and unassailable.

Mahone came again an unbeaten fellow. His election to the Senate was the result of a powerful uprising of the people, every class of men for whom Hill spoke. His vindication of his independence will become his strength at home and encourage the development of similar independence in other Southern States. If the South there free men are in the professions of agreement with President Garfield's course it will cease to offer further obeisance to a live and fair invangelists of conservatism at the next elections. That will be a sure test. If men like Chalmers are given to understand that if they steal seats the votes must not loque to be sustained in the next legal public scrutiny, they will not steal. —Never address your companion to a person engaged in tossing up a column of figures. There's nothing so deaf as an adder.—Cambridge Tyrant.

—A poem in one of our exchanges is entitled "The Cold, Cold Snow." Perhaps the poet is not aware that the snow is always cold in the winter time.—Norristown Herald.

—Recently a swarm made her appearance on the piazza where her daughter and the latter's young man were sitting. What are you looking for, ma?" asked the young lady. "The morning paper," was the reply. The porch was vacated.

—"Doctor," said one of our best young men in town, "I am satisfied it is something the matter with my brain; I know there is." What shall I do about it?" And the doctor calmly but firmly said he guessed it needed a little exercise, and he would charge him five dollars. And now the best young man goes around saying the doctor's a fool.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

—A citizen said to the young man who was taking his daughter's washing's afford to have so much wood burned in the parlor stove evenings, the young man replied that he supposed he could, or, for burials his own wood. Next day two weeks of cord hard wood was piled on the front of the young man and piled in the citizen's yard, with an axe by the side of the pile.

Raphael's Experience.

Did you ever have your country relatives return a visit you had made them? Then you know the feeling that a nuisance you were; how they had to take a basket in the busy haying season and how they had to be fed on large quantities of milk they might have sold and all that. They determined not to be such a bother to you. They are so afraid that they are making trouble that they leave on long everything for themselves. Rather than leave their room outside the door for the servants to clean, the men will come down and go the shed to black them themselves, and will take much trouble to get the brushes, etc., for them as it would be much less trouble to clean the boots. And the women visitors insist upon doing the work in the rooms they occupy for themselves, and bring everything to a level with the servants; and, not even satisfied with all this trouble to give anxiety to be no trouble, constantly looking about for something to do to make it. Such is the trouble to have country relatives. His father-in-law from Vermont would help him at his cosy home in the Highlands. The old man was up to all the tricks described. One morning he was out in the yard and saw a pile of wood. It consisted of long, knotty sticks, with some very large ones up into five foot lengths. The old man saw at once that it was cheap wood for the market, and he had evidently bought it. But he decided that it ought to be chopped. So he hunted around and found an old saw horse and saw and went at it. Did you ever saw wood? If not, you can see Raphael's example. It is the most tiresome, aggravating business known. All day the old man worked, never saying a word to the ladies to let them know what he was up to. He blistered his hands frightfully and his back ached terribly, but he stuck to it. About five o'clock he finished the pile. Soon after Ragbag came home from his business and saw the pile. "Ah, Jo, my boy, come out to the stable, I have to show you what I've done." He led Ragbag out proudly and showed him the pile of "stove" lengths. "I could have cost you one dollar a cord to have it sawed, and I've sawed you that sum." "Good heavens!" cried Ragbag, "do you know what you've done? That stuff was for rails and posts to build a rustic fence about my grounds, not for fire." Ragbag had no remarks for the old man, whom he knew meant well, but he went into the house and swore at his housekeeper in hard lick. And the old man heard that he was a fool. He saw horse sold in so doing skun himself is seven different spots.—Boston Post.

Bread Making In the East.

On our return an instructive sight awaited us. We saw how bread was baked in an adjoining building. It was done with a rapidity which explains how of all the supply was prepared every day, and how if some genius arrived the house-wife could make the necessary provision without delay. (Gen. xviii., 6.)

Making the Fellaheen the dough is generally leavened. A large round hole in the ground, some one and one-half feet deep, and the same in diameter, forms the oven. In this lie some little coals, which as in Hosea's time (Hosea vii., 6), are not allowed to go out at night, and when baking has begun are gently kindled.

This housewife first forms a lump of dough with her hand, then another spreads it out with an indescribably rapid action of both hands—which can as little be imitated by a conjurer's movement—into a cake as thin as a wafer, which she, moistened dab or rag she presses into the hot oven, where it remains sticking. In a minute it begins to swell, and is at once drawn out to make room for the following one.

The bread is now ready, but thicker than parchment, not very relishing, and somewhat sandy on the outside, but really very enjoyable for any one who has a good appetite. Although of the size of a large plate, such a slice contains but little nourishment, and Jeremiah could hardly have been saved from starvation when only one such piece of bread was given him every day.—Intell.

Johnny Skae's Big Chance.

A little more than two years since, says the Carson City (Nev.) Appeal, Johnny Skae, whom everybody knows, would visit Carson several times a month, and as he passed down the street from the railroad depot, with an independent swagger and a most independent look in his eye men would obviously gaze after him and express their convictions that he would outstrip any single manager of the Bonanza firm in the possession of millions. This was when the Sierra Nevada and Union were selling at from $300 to $600 per share, and Skae was supposed to hold 50,000 shares of the stock of those two mines. At that period he would have had no difficulty in raising $20,000 on his paper, and he could run his stock; but no, he was ambitious and desired no longer to play second fiddle even to such a solid financial power as the Bonanza firm. He fancied that the powerful dividends of the Sierra Nevada and Union Consolidated Virginia mines favorable conditions for a big boom in those paid by the California and Consolidated Virginia mines, Johnny was overcanguine. He loaned himself a 100 millionaire, whose millions were safely deposited in the bowels of the earth. On that he felt certain.

In the mean time he entertained his friends at dinner. He got Superintendent from San Francisco to participate in the festivities, and among the guests which were spread near the reservoir of the Virginia and Gold Hill Water Company, one which the finer wines were taken, and in various other ways Johnny showed that he was a man of such a manner that they privately called him "Prince John" to the manner born. Finally he did one great thing and that was in setting apart $2,000 to be used in advertising the stock of the mines of which he was so heavy a holder was to be expended in a manner which he hypothecated the sum to the New York Block, and purchased several thousand pieces of a magic, Sent thereafter the market crashed, and it was found that Johnny's loss footed up $50 and $50 per share. Of the Russian Capital. A real wit has put on the fee from Cronstadt to Oranienbaum, and is coining a traffic naturally with great facilities. The first train, bearing a gala party of officers and their friends, steamed away at the usual hour while a service of prayers was held. Some Mormon Stories.

A lady who has spent many years in Utah, states the following experiences in the columns of the New York Sun:

TESTIMONY OF THE LIONS WIFE.

"At almost the first dinner party I was invited to in Salt Lake City I was introduced to a gentleman. We will call him Jones. I was also introduced to two ladies named Jones, but it did not occur to me until I was soon afterward that they were both wives of the gentleman I had been introduced to. Jones was a polygamist. He had four wives in the Mormon Territory. When he swore that he had but one legitimate wife he became a traitor to the practice of his people. If the three other women are not his wives then the relation they bear to him is most immoral and he should be debarred social recognition in the capital and gubernatorial position. If the Mormon people are not persuaded into an abdication and prolonged continuance of polygamy by the present firm and loyal policy here Jones leaves there will not remain a vestige of it."

A Strange Story.

It is easy to attribute illusions and somnambulism to spiritual causes. The dreams and double consciousness when confined to a single individual, but how will you explain the following case, where hundreds of miles apart, are enacted the same scenes in the lives of two women at the same time? Mrs. Jones (the name is assumed) resided in Boston, and Mrs. Smith in Chicago. Both were young and beautiful, and had been married about twenty-eight years of age, with three or four little children around them, running about. She was terribly ignorant, while he was the most learned man in the Territory. Coming into the city the same day I met them constantly, and, as I supposed, by accident. They were pointed out to me as Mormon ladies. A day or two after I got into a street car. It was so loaded down entirely by ladies that I had to stand. I saw there all Orson Pratt's wives. A few days went on in succession, and they were leaving the children behind. There were four wagon-loads of Orson Pratt's wives, and I began to think they were as countless as the sands of the sea shore."

AVENGING ANGELS.

"Are there Avenging Angels?" the reporter asked.

"Most certainly; but, like the Bravos of Venice, their mission is known to but few and their movements still less. I had been a long time in the Territory before I could obtain any satisfaction about them men. One day I was out walking with a native and a friend who stopped us. During the conversation I observed him closely, because he was so handsome—his light, wavy brown hair, skin like a girl's and beautiful blue eyes. He was very effeminate looking. He was dressed after the fashion of men in general, except that he wore a large sombrero, which he kept drawn well over his face. He conversed silkily, his voice being quite soft and even. After he went his way my cousin said: 'Well, you have seen one at last.'

"One what?" I asked. 'Those Danites of Angel.' 'Where, where?' I said, looking around. 'Why, the man you have just left us. He is the chief Avenging Angel, and has had a hand in the bloodiest deeds that have stained the record of this Territory.' I never was so astonished in my life."

EDUCATION.

"The first emigrant women were grossly ignorant. Those born in Utah in the present generation are educated and refined, quite capable of thinking and acting for themselves. What will the newspapers brought into the Territory, the railroads tempting them to travel and bringing in hosts of strangers, the Mormon women one day have facilities for enlightenment. A signal to times in New York City. 'Tis young girls generally are refusing to accept polygamists as husbands, and wives are beginning to appeal to law to punish their licentious partners. The best class of men are willing to drop out of their religion the more repulsive features and would prefer to send as their delegate to the seat of Government some man who is not a polygamist. Utah has four wives in the Mormon Territory. When he swore that he had but one legitimate wife he became a traitor to the practice of his people. FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—If, when bread is taken from the oven, the loaves are turned topside down in the hot tins, and are allowed to stand a few minutes the crust will be tender and will cut easily.

—Cream Corn Cake.—Three cupfuls of corn meal, one cupful of flour, two cupfuls of sour milk, half a cupful of cream, one egg, one teaspoonful of salt, saleratus enough for the sour milk. Beat thoroughly, and bake in shallow pans.

—Cut all grape-vines received from the nursery this spring so that not one cane remains at last upon this perault but one bud to grow. Pinch out every axillary leaf (or lateral) as it unfolds. By this plan a single strong cane will be produced, that will probably fruit the second season.

—Many farmers do not know that they have a ruine of wealth—a small one—in the very door yard. Chip dirt is the very best material to mix with the soil in setting young trees. It is full of the elements of plant food and retains moisture. If you are setting out a new orchard plow up and utilize the soil from the old wood pile.

—Sausage Cakes.—Put a cupful of desiccated cocoanut, or grate one with brown skin pared off, into a pudding dish. Beat twelve ounces of sausage cakes. Pour over the cocoanut and cake a quart of boiling milk with one tablespoonful of butter melted in it and four tablespoons of sugar. Let it stand for an hour; covered; then beat four eggs and stir into the mixture; then bake in a slow oven like custard pudding. To be eaten with sauce or cold.

—Effects of the Epizooty.—The disease known as the epizooty is the destruction of the lining membrane of the air passages, accompanied by fever and swelling of the throat. Nearly every one often loses those membranes thickened by which the breathing is rendered difficult, cough set in, and a falling off of real wealth. In his agitation over the distressing news he walked to the unlocked front door, and half a dozen more. The day went on, and the husband enjoyed himself, but the women folk and servants were in hysterics and fainted and recovered and finally got awfully hungry. So they shouted and begged to be released. Then they went and made up, and when the husband got home he demanded through the keyhole if they were good friends and they said they thing to eat, they both said 'Yes,' and he opened the door and all appeared much smaller than it was in the darker light of the morning. Jane was a strong, good eye; but provided the pupil remains nearly the same size as it appeared in the darker light, the horse has a weak eye. sierefore have nothing to do with it.

—Bread.—I have heard this said: 'I could get along nicely with my work if my feet did not feel so sensitive and painful.' Without any doubt the woman who makes such remarks could relieve her self of this pain by wearing shoes and stockings large enough for her feet. Shoes and stockings should be large enough to allow the foot to spread in every direction when the weight of the body rests upon it. Shoes should be broad enough to allow the toes to lie straight, and not be pressed out of shape by the shoe. Shoes should be long enough to allow the foot to rest upon the ground without the toes touching the end of the shoe. Shoes should be high enough to allow the joints to bend without pressing upon the instep. Shoes should be made of soft leather, and should be worn without heels. Stockings should be large enough to allow the foot to spread in every direction when the weight of the body rests upon it. Stockings should be made of soft yarn, and should be worn without garters. Stockings should be changed every day, and should be washed every week. Shoes should be changed every day, and should be washed every week. Shoes should be changed every day, and should be washed every week. Shoes should be changed every day, and should be washed every week.

—Mahlab Cake.—Take one pound of sugar, one pound of butter, one pound of flour, one pound of almonds, blanched and pounded, one pound of citron, cut in thin slices, one pound of currants, one pound of raisins, seeded and chopped, one pound of candied orange peel, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied lemon peel, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied citron, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied pineapple, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied cherries, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied apricots, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied peaches, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied plums, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied figs, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied dates, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied prunes, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied pears, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied apples, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied quinces, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied grapes, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied oranges, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied lemons, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied limes, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied pomegranates, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied bananas, cut in thin slices, one pound of candied pineapples

THE California farmers prefer rain than the miners.

IN Brooklyn, Mass., a man aged 80 has an old horse as a colt-cart.

THERE are about 175 bands connected with the English army.

THERE are 16,000 open cisterns in St. Louis, and 15,000 in Chicago.

OVER 5,000 written applications for office have been filed by Gen. Garfield.

THE New York Sun admires with unconcealed joy, that the Republican party is now harmonious.

SECRETARY ROBERT T. LINCOLN has appointed Mr. Charles S. Sweet, a lawyer of Chicago, as his private secretary.

PETER COOPER says the Greenback movement is as much a part of his work as Peter sticks to that document as if he had been glued to it.

THE first secretary of war, appointed in 1781, was Lincoln; the last secretary of war, appointed exactly 100 years later, in 1881, is Lincoln.

SENATOR MAHONE is said to be worth $2,000,000. He may be worth it, but the southern Democrats would take much less than that for him.

AN intimate friend of Mr. Conkling says he is on the best of terms with President Garfield, and will be one of his strongest supporters in the senate.

IT appears that, excepting Union passage, there is not a single member of the cabinet who was in favor, originally, of either Blaine or Garfield for the Presidency.

AS GARFIELD has been a year in office all, the Cincinnati Enquirer predicts that foreign missions, big and little, will be filled by the President with celerity in streetcars.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD'S eldest boys get about 10 letters a day each from former schoolmates, begging their influence in the matter of what are sometimes called appointments.

SENATOR CONKLING congratulated Mahone on his reply to Bob Hill, and told him he was proud of the manliness he displayed in the face of the unparalled insolence of his opponent.

GARFIELD says the fly in the President-ial ointment is the fact that on the eve of his high station he is impelled for him to go back to the good old days of forcible fight in the political arena.

THE New York Observer finds much cause for congratulation in President Garfield's refusal of wine at the banquet given to his chancellor at Washington the evening before the inauguration.

GOVERNOR PORTER refused a cabinet place because the people of Indiana by such a generous majority had elected him governor that he preferred to accept their compliment and stand by them.

LORD JOHN WESTBURY, of Chicago, says Robert Lincoln is a growing young man, with an industry that will surely be crowned with success. Mr. Wentworth believes that the President awaits him.

THE Washington Post consoles its Democratic mourners in the senate that their loss of power in that body will be more than compensated for by their release from responsibility. This every cloud has a silver lining.

SOME of the Southern Greenbackers have had enough of Democracy. One of them asked the other day what a Greenbacker in his state was replied: "A Greenbacker in Mississippi is a man who will be hanged before he will cast another vote for the prospective and infamous Bourbon Democracy." This has not much of the flavor of a future Democratic and Greenback alliance.

New York Herald: It is one of the best evidences of a hearty political condition that the new Administration entered upon almost their entire force a "Southern policy." President Garfield is not asked what his Southern policy is going to be the country is not curious about a South-ern policy; even the most patriotic wish to hear none of that, or the other Southern policy, have no further anxiety about it. In fact, there is no Southern policy any longer. The men in power are those who were chosen because of their Northern policy. Harper and the southern wing of the American party and the new Administration is called on to carry out no policy but the whole country. Neither is pledged to the country or to either party by a democratic caucus, as the experiment made by Hayes-Chandler ought to prove. Mr. Hayes supposed that he could take possession of the executive office, and by patriotic, honorable acts, which would commend him to all parties, reconcile them and reunite the people—and of course in the Southern States and nothing threatened in their policies. He did this policy ground neither for himself, in his party, or the country. Mr. Hayes also put no faith in action on the Southern Democracy longer than it was without interest to them for it soon, but the part of the Southern press was not encouraging. It was enough for any, of prescribing as the public expense, personal acrimony and hate and demanding that his party should be cast out, was the political gamblers who had helped him into the White House, and whom Conkling and friends of reputation to hell and the carriage to enter. President Garfield for no such obligations. The new Administration has come in with a strong hill at both, as to speak. It has no disreputable debts to pay. The term to which a Stalwart Republican had been the main carries he will be sworn in the White House, preceded into that he had been honest and responsible—whenever this is qualified, if the Southern wing of the Republican party which pushed to the front conspicuous of Mr. Hayes, will receive and will recognize to give a hearty welcome, and by adhering to the party, which will keep on supporting the party constitution. President Garfield will be able to dictate and will have his own men into responsible positions. Democratic heroes in the late find in almost every state Mr. Hayes' southern appointments will not have much influence and the standard of our intelligence and of our patriotic duty are to be lowered. The confidence of wise, intelligent and conservative men will not only now but in the future be restored to the civil offices.

All these considerations be the spring elections should be made early and united effort should be put forth in every congressional district.

It is to be hoped that the Republicans over the state will take a determined stand in the approaching elections, and the supporters of getting to a position for a Republican victory will be gathered upon them.

Very truly yours,
H. P. BALDWIN, Chairman.
W. D. SWEET, Secretary.

New York Letter.

NEW YORK, March 21, 1881.

The event of the week—not of course the assassination of the Czar. It was despatched here when, in the dark hour of our direst need during the civil war, a Russian fleet, by his order, hid in our harbor with sealed instructions which, had England or France, or both, interfered in our troubles, would have shown at once what a friend he was to our country. The vile spirit which triumphs over the disgraceful event in our which has been more than once shown itself dangerously conspicuous. The center of the capital of the country and of much of its manufacturing as well as mercantile and financial interests, simple humbel most keenly that the monster of Fatalism must be kept down, for here, if it appears its horrid head, we are most exposed to immediate ruin. The Russian Israelites had a high old time celebrating the event in one of their old enemy, happy and freshly married in the Bronx, touched by some of the murderers at the great Archbishop of Petersburg they are not extradited and guillotined in one of these things your Bella don't pretend to understand—and numerous other equally republican ruffians and idiots. Nobody else sympathized with them, and it is a good sign of the loathing of treachery that right here in this big city filled with foreigners and with an undue proportion of very poor people such a very small percentage believe in the murderous, revolting doctrines of socialism.

To come from the sublime to the ridiculous, it would never do for America to let Russia get ahead of us in sensational explosions. Two small boys, aged seventeen, went into partnership for the classic manufacture of those toy torpedoes which annually help to make the Fourth of July hideous with their hyperexplosions of the healthy old rocket kicked up to good, honest, old fashioned gunpowder. The young cubs were doing quite a thriving business, somewhat on their own level several girls to help them pack the horrid implements of torture. One of these girls admired possibly with one of those small feed boredom which, in spite of the decrees of fashion, seems still to survive among the lower classes of factory hands, in some of her flirtations, swore and swore swept off a small box of detonating powder from a low mood, and pouring the entire load into some ramified iron cast-iron stove which had been a chimney. Strange to say, beyond a few bruises and a terrible scare to the children in an adjacent public school no one was injured.

Talk of explosives and public meetings, a grand meeting has been called by the most influential citizens, representing millions of capital, who have determined once for all to get to the bottom of this perfect mystery which draws nearly a million dollars a year out of the city for cleaning it, and positively for weeks and weeks together don't strike even the smallest pretense of doing the work. Without any joking, a few more months of such neglect would transform our ground floor basements into cellars. The filth is appalling, and I have ex-Editor Williams will get the grand entrance this time. I don't suppose he cares, for nobody ever accused him of being a fool, whatever else they alleged against him, and he has had plenty of very comfortable opportunities for furbishing his nest with abundance of metaphorical straw's down.

St. Patrick's Day, for a wonder, passed off without row. The observances outward and visible, at least, was quiet. The demonstrations were limited for below their old proportions, and the police only didn't turn out. Inwardly the celebration was, I am led to believe, very joyous. The wit and vitality found superfluous expression in street, and the writing of the Green was observed most religiously in this age of privileged Carnival in the middle of Lent allowed to the Hibernian branch of the great white race.

Lenten marriages seem to have become, by the way, rather more common than of late. One of the most noticeable, though a very quiet affair, was the wedding of J. S. Simonton, the child of the associated press, to the step-daughter of an Episcopal clergyman. The somewhat elderly bridegroom of the young and charming lady is quite wealthy, being the owner, I understand, of at least two of the most prominent papers of the Pacific slope, besides getting a very handsome salary in the important position he occupies with relation to the great dailies who established the news agency of which he is the active head. He is well liked, and has my congratulations, as well as those of several thousands of newspaper men here and elsewhere.

One proposed Exhibition doesn't seem to go off at half cock, as it were, by any means, and it was said that Grant was going to resign the presidency of the combination in disgust. But let not this kind of a man, as some people have had previous occasion to remember, and is going to stick. He has expressed himself, however, with considerable feeling about the selfishness of certain parties who, instead but reap enormous benefits by its being held at lowest, the vile determined co. Vanderbilt has agreed to put in, all told, less than $500,000, and will probably make that in a month. Others who can not possibly make anything like such

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

U. S. Senate Proceedings.

MR. VOORHEES on the 14th called up a resolution offered on this day before, calling on the Secretary of the Interior to send to the names of Ingmar United States Marshals appointed in the Territory of Utah, and the names of persons in that State in charge of the jail, and on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, an amendment was adopted calling for such information in possession of the Attorney-General relating to the proceedings for the appointment of such Marshals, and the resolution as amended was agreed to. Mr. EDMUNDS offered a resolution which was adopted requesting the President to communicate a motion, which was lost on the 8th inst., with the letter with the Bannocks, and Mr. MAHONE with the Republicans. A motion to consider executive business was also lost—to 37—when Mr. CAMERON moved that the motion to that effect would be reached on the pending business, and to-day's session was then agreed to.

THE organization resolution was called up on the 15th, when Mr. CHANDLER moved to adjourn, but yielded to Mr. VEST to offer a resolution which was adopted requesting of the President the correspondence and communications between the Governors of Texas and Mexico during 1858 to 1861, inclusive, in relation to the subject of the Texan boundary controversies, and also the correspondence during the same period between the State Department and the United States Minister at Mexico relative to the same subject. Resolutions were finally passed to the Governors of the various Territories and the United States Minister at Mexico, calling for the same information. The motion to adjourn was lost—29 to 38—Mr. MAHONE and WALLACE voting with the Democrats—the consideration of executive business was then taken up, and the Senate sat at the afternoon. After the voting down of other motions to adjourn, Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Republican Finance Committee, reported a Republican bill, it might be better for the Democratic party to let it pass, and have the credit of it, but he was willing to appreciate at all that was said, therefore he would not press the motion to adjourn. Mr. MAHONE spoke as well as he could, and he made a motion to adjourn, but was voted down.

THE credentials of Mr. Edgerton, of Minnesota, were presented on the 15th, and he was sworn in. Mr. PENDLETON said he had received information which induced him to believe that it would be impossible during the morning to obtain a vote on the pending organization resolution, and he therefore moved to adjourn, which motion was agreed to.

THE credentials of Mr. TYLER (Mich.) were presented on the 19th, and he took the oath of office. Mr. EDMUNDS's organization resolution was immediately postponed—28 to 37—the Democrats voting in the negative and the Republicans with them. Mr. ANTHONY then offered a resolution declaring that the Democratic members on a Republican basis which was agreed to—yeas 37, nays 28. Mr. VOORHEES said any statement that he had been consulted by Mr. ANTHONY in regard to the matter was incorrect, and Mr. MAHONE with the Republicans. A motion to consider executive business was also lost—to 37—when Mr. CHANDLER moved that the motion to that effect would be reached on the pending business, and to-day's session was then agreed to.

THE organization resolution was called up on the 16th, when Mr. CAMERON, Pa., moved to adjourn, but yielded to Mr. VEST to offer a resolution which was adopted requesting of the President the correspondence and communications between the Governors of Texas and Mexico during 1858 to 1861, inclusive, in relation to the subject of the Texan boundary controversies, and also the correspondence during the same period between the State Department and the United States Minister at Mexico relative to the same subject. Resolutions to the various Governors of Territories, and to the United States Minister at Mexico, calling for the same information, were also adopted. The motion to adjourn was lost—29 to 38—Mahone and Wallace
